TIME OR MONEY

THE strike of farm labourers in East Anglia has, up to now, been conducted on exceptionally friendly terms. The men are very well aware that the masters are in a tight fix, and the masters understand that it would be a hard and an unjust thing to send the farm servants back to the extremely bad position they held before the war. There should not, however, be any fatal barrier to their coming to an agreement. It is very obvious that unless agricultural conditions undergo a complete revolution, the farmers cannot go on growing crops at the present rate of expenditure, of which farm wages form the biggest item. They must find a way to get the work done more cheaply, or take the consequence, which is bankruptcy. Now, the great and just complaint of the farm labourer is that at the present cost of living it is practically impossible for him to feed and maintain a family on any wage under 25s. a week, if he can do it on that. Therefore, a decrease in wages is not practicable. On the other hand, the farmer argues very reasonably that if the labourer cannot sustain himself and his family on what would be an economic wage, that is to say, a wage that would allow a fair profit to the employer, the alternative is that he should do a few more hours' work weekly. When a man is reduced to poverty such as the nation is experiencing at the present moment, he cannot afford to be too particular about insisting upon working only a definite number of hours. As a matter of fact, those who make their way in the world very seldom count the hours per week that they work. Most of us toil a great deal harder and for many more hours than the farm labourer.

There are various considerations which should induce the labourer to consider an increase in his hours of labour. He should sit down and try and count the days in which he would formerly have been idle and without pay in a spring such as the present. Farming operations cannot be conducted to any advantage in wet weather. Before the war farmers were accustomed to act on that principle, and a great number of men were sent home every wet day. It was a very bad principle, because it enforced a great reduction of wages that were already very insufficient. Still, the farmer could not be blamed; his men do not work under cover, as do operatives in a factory. A very great change has taken place in the attitude of farmers to this side of the question. They do find work of some kind for their men, whatever be the state of the weather. It is right and proper that they should do so, and many times this view was supported in our pages before the change took place; but the fact that he is paid in bad weather for working at less necessary tasks throws a responsibility on the farm labourer that he should try to make up for this in the sunny hours. The success of farming depends to a very great extent on the use that is made of the sunny days. The labourers in East Anglia must have memories far from pleasant of the occasions on which they were turned back without having had the opportunity to earn a penny. Surely, they owe something in return for this concession. We are sure that farmers would be satisfied if the men would consent to work longer hours in the spring and summer months, when the days are long and the hours of sunshine many.

This recalls another side of the subject. Very often townspeople talk of country work as if it were the same as town work; in fact, numbers of them declare that a farm is only a food factory. It differs very much, however, from the food factory in one important particular. The factory is a roofed building in which work may go on as easily in wet weather as in sunshine; frost makes no difference; the hours can be maintained at a level throughout the year; the whistle or siren is heard at the same hour in winter as in summer. This is not the way on the farm at all. During a great portion of the year the sun does not rise in time to enable the labourer to make an early start, and it goes down at night before he has had any reason to complain of a long day's work. Now, the farmer does not mind that. The tasks of cultivation are comparatively few in the wintertime, and so he is ready to fall in with the mood of the climate and let the hours of work be shortened in the short days. That, surely, is a good reason for their being lengthened in summer. If these considerations were taken to heart by the farm labourer, as they would be if he were left to himself, it would be easily possible to arrange that his wages should be kept at a living rate and that he should be sure of permanent work if he made up the farmer's loss caused by his enforced idleness in wet weather by throwing his energy into work when the conditions were favourable. On these lines it is surely possible to arrive at some working arrangement. It is very evident that neither farmer nor labourer can expect things to go so easily as they did previous to 1914. Since then the country and the individual have been impoverished, and the only way to make up for the loss incurred is to put one's heart more thoroughly into the work of production.

COUNTRY NOTES

IT is necessary to clear up a misunderstanding in regard to wild life and Box Hill. The confusion arises from the use of two words—sanctuary and reservation. The former implies welcome and protection; the latter is usually meant to describe land which is primarily to be inhabited by wild animals in order that they may breed there and so perpetuate species that are in danger of dying out. This is not at all the purpose with which lands are made over to the National Trust. Those open spaces are designed, in the first place, for human enjoyment, freedom to walk and breathe and indulge in the amusements natural to the open air. The National Trust was incorporated, in the words quoted by the Secretary in our Correspondence pages of this issue, "as regards lands, for the preservation (so far as practicable) of their natural aspect, features and animal and plant life." When the space is fully open to the public, it may be regarded as certain that many birds and many beasts will soon discover that it is a safe place for them to haunt, and all will be welcome. Any destruction of life, plant or animal, would lay the offender open to prosecution. The idea is that wild life will always find a sanctuary there. Plants and wild flowers will be preserved as zealously as birds and quadrupeds. Upon that, indeed, depends the enjoyment of a very great portion of the public. Many of them may not know much about the technicalities of natural history, but they love to see wild flowers, to hear birds singing and to see wild creatures of every kind disporting themselves or going about their various errands in safety and tranquillity. That is no small part of the charm attaching to such an exquisitely wild and beautiful bit of the country as Box Hill.

LEITH HILL TOWER, with five surrounding acres, and Bookham Common have been acquired by the National Trust. These form what gunners call a bracket north and south of Box Hill. Now that the lengthening days set men and women's thoughts a-roaming, some may think it worth their while to run down to Box Hill and wander, themselves, among the woods we are seeking to buy for the National Trust. Our fund has now reached the end of the first spurt—the total standing at £5,200. Therefore, £1,800 remains to be raised. A cinematograph campaign, in which Miss Ellen Terry is taking part, is being arranged in order to bring the appeal before a section of the community who do not often see COUNTRY LIFE; but we feel sure that there are many of our readers who have only been waiting to see how the fund progressed before making some contribution themselves. To them we suggest that the time has come to enable us to score a direct hit on Box Hill, now that the National Trust have "bracketed" it so neatly. Winter being overpast, the season is auspicious for an offering to Spring, and the generous may be assured that their own flowers will bloom more sweetly, the shade of their trees be more grateful, if a little sacrifice is laid on the altar of common weal.

LAST Saturday saw the turning of the tide in favour of Oxford after a year of Cambridge triumphs. The Sports and the Boat Race were held on the same day—the most perfect imaginable spring day for such a festival—and Oxford won both. In the Sports it was a very great pity that Seagrove was ill and could not run. He was to have attempted the feat only accomplished by Pollock Hill of winning both the mile and the three miles. It would have been a terribly difficult task, but he might conceivably have accomplished it. As it was, Cambridge did very well to make such a hard fight of it as they did, and the day provided a wonderful individual triumph for their president, H. M. Abrahams, who broke all manner of records. His long jumping was extremely dramatic, first a jump of over 24ft., spoiled by his just going over the board, then his record of 23ft. 7¼ins., and so back to the pavilion to nurse a bruised heel and save himself for the Quarter. That Quarter will be classed with the great races between Jordan and Fitzherbert, Rudd and Butler, and the scene when Abrahams with his glorious stride struggled home more dead than alive was an unforgettable one. Stevenson, the American quarter-mile champion, has clearly not yet settled down in this country, nor did Huhn, the hurdler, show what he is capable of. Our climate is fully as trying to American athletes as theirs is to ours.

THE HOUSES.

Forlorn and glum the couples go,
While Capital and Labour fight.
For lack of homes we can't unite
And love says "Yes"; the builders, "No."

Yet, troubling not for time nor rest,
The courting rooks be flying thick,
And not a beak wi'out a stick
And not a elm wi'out a nest.

It do cast down my ancient mind
How senseless fowls can run their show,
Marry and help their children grow,
And not us clever human kind.

Lords of creation we may be,
Though what the mischief we creates
But trouble, taxes, higher rates,
Be damned to us if I can see.

EDEN PHILLPOTTS.

IF these two fine runners partially failed, another of their countrymen had a great triumph, and Mellen is the first American to stroke one of our University crews to victory. The Boat Race seems this year to have created more interest than for years past. Everybody, however much of a Dry Bob, held views as to who was going to win, and when Saturday dawned so fine an enormous crowd was certain. It was swollen, too, at the last moment by thousands who had made a dash for the river either from the Sports or the Cup-tie at Chelsea. The race was worthy of the occasion, for the losers, though fairly and squarely beaten, chased their conquerors to the last painful inch. Everybody, however warmly their sentiments were engaged on the other side, will congratulate Nickalls, the Oxford president, who is the son of one of the greatest Eton and Oxford oarsmen that ever sat in a boat, Guy Nickalls, and the nephew of another, Harcourt Gold. The career of an oarsman is briefer than that of a player of ball games, and it is therefore all the more pleasant to see a famous rowing name gaining fresh lustre in a younger generation.

SPEAKING at Cambridge on Saturday afternoon, Sir Robert Sanders, Minister of Agriculture, gave a resumé of what the Government were trying to do for agriculture. The Prime Minister, he said, considered that subsidies and protection of foodstuffs could not be given or imposed, because the greater part of the population of this country were townsmen and they would not stand a rise of price. So he was reduced to considering what could be done "short of those two big things." Sir Robert placed local taxation in the position of the highest burden that farmers had to bear. He said that it was one of the hardships that everybody recognised, but no Government had yet been able to find a solution. There is no getting over the fact that such imposts as the Highway Rate must be met somehow, and if not by the locality then by the nation ; in other words, the amount needed must be taken out of one pocket and put into another. If the accounts are not paid out of rates they must come out of taxes. That is the only conceivable relief that can be given to rural district councils in respect of the upkeep of country roads. In regard to railway rates, Sir Robert Sanders said that Parliament could not deal with this directly. Some time ago the Railway Rates Tribunal was set up as the Court of Appeal. The railway managers must do more than profess anxiety. They must reduce their rates for agricultural produce, and the Post Office must follow their example and bring down the rates for parcels post.

THE evidence for reducing railway rates continues to gather strength. The railway companies have gained immensely through the falling costs of everything and are in a position now to pass some of their prosperity to a country sadly in need of help. Their bill for salaries and wages has decreased from £154,000,000 in 1920 to £111,000,000 (estimated) in 1923, which compares with a total of £117,000,000 in 1922. Fuel has also been costing them less ; the total paid in 1920 was £25,000,000 ; it went down to £15,000,000 in 1922 and is estimated at £14,000,000 in 1923. Dividends have increased by 25 per cent. on Ordinary shares over the amount paid in 1913. The companies ought to be able to respond to the demand for a decrease of 33⅓ per cent., and, if they are in a generous mood, should be able to revert to the rates of 1913. They profess to be very much in sympathy with the movement, but contend that the reductions made in 1922 cost them £30,000,000. It will be difficult for them to resist the demand now put forward.

ONE would have liked to see all the relics of Mary Queen of Scots kept in Scotland. As time goes on it takes nothing from, but rather adds to her infinite variety. What Helen was to the Greeks that Mary is to the Scots. Both of them were frail and erring and lovely, a combination which never yet has failed to appeal to a human nature that would, if articulate, confess to the first two of these attributes and wish it could claim the third. The land of " brown heath and shaggy wood " has ever been also a land of devotion and romance, though these feelings are often concealed under a hard surface. Many of the pieces in Sir George Clerk's collection came direct to the family of Sir George Clerk of Penicuik, Midlothian, through Gillies Mowbray, one of the Queen's ladies. In Major Tytler's collection there was a watch, with shagreen case, that was given by the Queen to her attendant, Marsie, the night before the execution. It was sold for 590 guineas. There were several things disposed of at the sale that must have appealed strongly to the Scottish mind. What Scotsman would not like to have a lock of Prince Charlie's hair, or the pair of paste buckles that he wore at Culloden ? These and many other articles have a value that cannot be set out in pounds, shillings and pence. They attest to the romantic affection of the Scottish nation for the Stuart line.

ALREADY it is evident that the discovery of the tomb of King Tutankhamen is going to revolutionise our knowledge of mechanics in ancient Egypt. This is curiously exemplified by the explanation, which has now been worked out by Mr. R. Engelbach, Chief Inspector of Antiquities in Upper Egypt, of the manner in which such obelisks as form a striking feature at Karnak were erected. Mr. Engelbach has explained how he came to be interested in the solution of the problem as to how these obelisks were erected without the aid of either windlass or block and tackle. Indeed, the Egyptians erected them in existing courts of less length than that of the obelisk itself. He gives such definite facts as are known about the methods. In the first place, he says that a sloping brick embankment some 400yds. long and 35yds. high was nothing surprising to the Egyptian. In a papyrus that has come down to us, one scribe sets another a problem as to how many bricks would be required to make one of this size. In the same papyrus reference is made to the use of sand in erecting the monument. Then comes in a factor which it is difficult to realise at this time of day, and that is, the practically unlimited number of men at the disposal of the builder. Sometimes enormous numbers of men—as many as ten thousand, at times—were sent to transport monuments of less weight than an obelisk. With these and other hints in his mind, Mr. Engelbach had a model in wood made and placed on an embankment having in its high end a pit, rather funnel-shaped, descending down to the pedestal for the obelisk. A gentle curve leads down from the surface of the embankment until it meets the sloping walls of the funnel.

SUCH were the preparations. The process was simple. The obelisk was rolled up the incline until its butt was well over the funnel, which had previously been filled with sand. It is easy to imagine it—the base of the obelisk ready to sink into the funnel and the whole supported by the sand at the embankment. The sand was gradually removed through tunnels leading from the outside of the embankment to the base of the funnel, until the obelisk came down on to the pedestal prepared for it. It was easy in the case of the model, which was on a 1 : 100 scale of the obelisk at Aswan, to avoid the tedious removal of the sand. It was allowed simply to run out through a slit in the bottom of the model. The whole thing works perfectly and the obelisk finally comes to rest at the base of the funnel. Mr. Engelbach is publishing the complete results of his studies under the title of " The Aswan Obelisk." They cover the whole process of quarrying, transporting and erection. It is good to know that a cheaper and less technical edition is being published which will have a series of photographs of the model in action. It seems almost certain that the Chief Inspector of Antiquities in Upper Egypt has solved a puzzle that has engaged the attention of antiquaries and mechanics for ages.

AN OLD-WORLD LAND.

(ROUMANIA.)

There's a sweet and poetic land I've seen :
Of lore-steep'd valleys and flower-strewn dells,
Staid oxen, buffaloes and ponies lean,
Where the peasant tarries and sour-milk sells.

*Iaurt ! she sings, then lowers her tubs
To proffer small bowls of sour-milk " mould,"
Of that or smantâna†, as her hands she rubs,
Saying " Buffaloes' cream is richer than gold ! "

The cry of Mielu ‡ by her man in the spring,
Proclaims skinn'd lambs that he carries around ;
O'er his shoulder, from poles in time they swing,
For Paşte § draws nigh, and lambs must abound !

Primăvară || has come and cried to all !
With fetters unloos'd the waters rush past,
Adorning the fields and echoing the call
In that land of light where flowers come fast.

BACH at Queen's Hall is the expected : Bach in Bermondsey, with seats from fivepence upwards, as unexpected as it is pleasant. As a nation, we are fond of belittling ourselves ; but one, at least, of our stock humilities —the assertion that we are, as compared, for instance, with the Germans, an unmusical nation—is beginning to ring very false. During the last six weeks Bach's " Passion According to St. Matthew " has been given in London by the Bach Choir alone no fewer than seven times ; in every case the audience was a satisfactory one, and in three, at least, the hall was crowded to the doors. The last concert took place in Bermondsey Central Hall. There is no need to discuss the merits of Dr. Vaughan Williams' conception of what Elgar has called the noblest work of religious music ever written. It was certainly beautiful, reverent and wonderful in its sense of continuity.

THE DUKE OF ALVA'S BIBLE

By Dr. C. Hagberg Wright.

FIVE hundred years ago a Jewish rabbi spent his days in a cell in the Monastery of San Francisco at Toledo, engaged in translating the Bible. The strange story of this learned man toiling over a work so distasteful to him is given in full in the introduction to the Duke of Alva's "Biblia de la Casa de Alva," now, at last, after five centuries, and by virtue of the present duke's love of art and learning, published in a limited edition for the members of the Roxburghe Club. The history of the manuscript, of the translator and of his glosses is told by Don Antonio Paz y Mélia, the duke's archivist, who, in collaboration with his son, is responsible for the production of this monumental work—a work, wrote the late learned French Professor Berger, "without equal in the art and science of Spain."

The Bible was produced between 1422 and 1430 and then lost sight of for two centuries, evidently passing through many hands and many vicissitudes, until at last it came into the possession of the ducal family of Alva by marriage. The first definite reference to this Bible occurs in a document found in the records of the Inquisition in 1622, where, in a declaration, a bookseller, Jerónimo de Courbes, states that he had seen on a reading-desk in the cell of a Jesuit father, Salazar, a Bible written in Castilian on parchment, with illustrations in old-fashioned writing, in one volume. The Jesuit had it on loan for the better understanding of some doubtful words of the Song of Solomon, upon which he was writing a book. The Council of the Inquisition then made efforts to obtain possession of the manuscript, and, having done so, kept it for two years, until, in 1624, the Inquisitor Andrés Pacheco, declaring it to be "of great price," presented it to the Duke of Olivares as a token of gratitude for services rendered by him and his father to the Inquisition, and because the duke was of the lineage and house of Luiz de Guzman, Grand Master of the Order of Calatrava, who had interested himself in the translation and had spent large sums on its preparation. The field of Calatrava, from which the Order takes its name, is south of Toledo in the Province of Ciudad Real, and was the scene of many bloody battles between the Moors and Christians. In 1150 the custody of the fortress of Calatrava was confided to the care of the Templars, but, deeming it inadvisable to attempt its defence, they surrendered it to the king, who, a few years later, made a donation of the place to the abbot of the monastery of Santa Maria de Fitero and to a monk, Diego Velasquez, a very valiant soldier. Shortly after, the nobles who had assumed the monkish garb to assist in repelling the enemy refused to acknowledge an abbot as their head. Meeting together, they chose a "Maestre," Don Garcia, from among their number. It was he who persuaded the then Pope (1164) to found the Order of Calatrava and give it a rule, the Cistercian. Under him and his successors the Order gained great renown in fighting the Moors throughout three centuries, and won many a hard-fought battle. The Order was directly subject to the Pope, and the kings of Castile admitted the Grand Master to their councils. It was a religious militia rather than a community of monks. Nobles alone were admitted, and each adherent was forced to take a vow of chastity, but he was allowed to marry once, provided the bride of his choice was of unblemished purity. If he were unfaithful to his vow he was condemned to eat his food on the ground and was given bread and water for three days of the week; he had also to do penance on Fridays. In the twelfth century they wore cloaks similar to the Cistercians, with caps lined with fur, and they received permission from the Pope to wear a red cross. In later times alterations seem to have been made, as we are told they were dressed in a religious garment with a scapulary and a hood sewn to it. The Order was rich and had in its hands over 350 towns and villages, and ninety churches, and received an annual revenue of a million pesetas.

THE PRIESTS WITH THE ARK AT THE PASSAGE OF JORDAN.

THE DEATH OF ABSALOM.

When the fifteenth century dawned, Spain was in a state of greater turmoil than ever. Not only were the Spaniards at continual warfare with the Moors, but the Church, on her part, was gaining strength and daily carrying on her warfare against the Unbeliever with more energy. Hitherto it had confined itself to repressing heresy among Christians. Now the monks, in their zeal for the spread of their religion, began to attack both Moor and Jew. The lot of the latter in Castile was happier than in other parts of Spain, thanks to the protection of the kings of Castile. We read of friendly conferences and disputations taking place between Jewish and Christian doctors; many of the former at the end of the fourteenth century had produced learned treatises on philosophical and scientific subjects which have gained for them a place in the history of the literature of Spain. Although these conferences could hardly have been expected to convince either party, they demonstrate that friendly relations existed in certain parts of the country between both nationalities; but this happy condition vanished as soon as the Inquisition got control.

It was one of these learned Jewish doctors whom the Grand Master of Calatrava, Luiz de Guzman, took into his service and compelled to live in a monastery and to work on the Bible against his will. Tired after a strenuous campaign against the Moors, Luiz de Guzman retired to the monastery of San Augustin to seek rest from his worldly pursuits, and to refresh his mind with the study of heavenly things and in reading the Bible. The difficulties of the text and the erroneous manuscripts at his disposal, however, perplexed him so much that he sought the advice of the monks among whom he lived. With a wonderful toleration and broad-mindedness, they seem not only to have suggested the idea to him of having a Bible of his own prepared with glosses and commentaries, but also to have recommended him to send for a very erudite rabbi, Moses Arragel of Guadaljara, who was settled as his vassal at Maqueda.

Luiz de Guzman wrote at once to Arragel, offering him generous remuneration if he would assist him in his desire for further knowledge. The rabbi was not to be tempted by any sum of money, and in an able, apologetic letter protested that he was not sufficently equipped for the work, and that were he to accept the Grand Master's offer his labour would be vain. He added also that he was a Jew and intended to live and die a Jew, that his glosses could not, therefore, be of profit to a Christian, and that his law also forbade him to illustrate the Bible with pictures. He begged the Grand Master not to insist on his undertaking the work, but to apply to the "Masters and doctors in Holy Theology amongst his own Christian people"; and he ended his letter with the courteous wish: "May the First Cause and true God the Father, the Almighty, Immortal ever-lasting King long preserve your life and estate here on earth; and after passing over to the distant shore may He give your innocent spirit a place among the happy Souls. Amen."

The Grand Master, however, did not pay attention to the rabbi's excuses and replied, twitting him with false modesty, and at the same time giving him peremptory orders to make haste to the monastery of San Francisco at Toledo, where he would be taken care of and "furnished with bread and pence for his maintenance." "Your help," he wrote, "is not required because of the lack of learned Christian doctors but in order that the glosses of the Jewish doctors may be made available for our study."

The duke's letter was followed by one from Fray Arias de Encinas, a relative of the duke's and guardian of the monastery of San Francisco, who had received instructions to look after the rabbi. Arias promised to provide him with commentaries and glosses, and to nominate two Christian scholars who would advise him on theological questions. He praised the Jews for their scholarship, telling him also that, as he was "so obstinate a Jew," the pictures would be painted by artists of Toledo. and it would only be necessary for him to leave spaces for them.

The rabbi, driven to consent, presented himself at the monastery and, contrary to his inclination, began work. In the Prologue he invoked Almighty God to guide him and prayed that he might not incur the displeasure of Jew or Gentile by his glosses and narrations. After several years of steady application he completed the Bible in 1430 and presented it to the office of the monastery, where it was recognised as the "greatest and most celebrated work that could be found in any Kingdom." The Bible was then submitted for examination to a committee specially appointed, who took about twelve months in criticising and correcting the manuscript. There was much discussion and a long correspondence between the Jew and the Christians; but the whole was carried on and marked by great dignity and by respect for each other's beliefs and convictions. What reward the rabbi received for his labour is not recorded; we are also left in ignorance of any further details about his life.

Whether the Bible was in reality a new translation or merely a careful revision of an old Castilian version translated from the Vulgate has been the subject of considerable diversity of opinion; but this is not a question into which we need enter. Probably scholars will be more inclined to share the late Professor Berger's opinion that the work was a new revision.

The interesting point in this Bible and in the glosses is the way in which the Jew puts forward his views and states where he disagrees with the Christian doctors. We find him continually saying: "Thus have the Christians interpreted it, but, Sir, the Jews hold the contrary opinion." Don Antonio Paz y Mélia remarks that a patient reader of the rabbi's glosses will see how docile he was and yet how subtly and quietly he disparages the tenets of his adversaries, losing no opportunity of stating frankly where and why he differed. He does not hesitate to introduce Jewish fables and tales. The story of Eve and the Serpent was, he averred, merely a myth with a figurative signification. Eve, he said, when the serpent told her she was condemned to die, simply tried to procure the death of her husband by means of the apple in her desire that he should not survive her and marry another woman!

The Codex forms a volume of 515 folio leaves written in two columns. The glosses fill the margins, the writing being so small that there are sometimes eighty-nine lines to the page. The first page of each book is adorned with capital letters, with fringes along the left margin in gold and colours, of which twenty-nine have been reproduced. The coloured illustrations are 334 in number; seven are full-page illustrations (which are given in this reproduction), finely executed, probably, Don Antonio Paz y Mélia says, by a French artist, while the rest are coarser in design and probably by Spanish artists of Toledo. Many of these are of interest because they show how the mediæval mind represented the facts. The most important full-page illustration represents the Grand Master Luiz de Guzman clothed in the white mantle of his Order, a Cistercian mantle, with the red cross of Calatrava on his left breast. A row of knights at his feet are engaged in works of charity. Below, in the centre of a group of vassals, the rabbi, with the red wheel (the symbol Jews were bound to wear) sewn on the left shoulder of his coat, presents his book to the Grand Master, while the priests who aided the rabbi in the work stand on each side of the group.

Professor Berger remarks that the colours are very vivid and there is a colour scheme unusual in European MSS. "The pictures," he adds, "draw their inspiration from two sources, the one Christian and probably taken from the beautiful Bible of Toledo now lost, the other Jewish, proved by the very accurate representation of objects of Jewish worship."

The execution of the work reflects the greatest credit on the duke and his archivists and is a very pleasing example of what modern Spain can do in the way of reproduction and editing.

FIRST WEEK OF FLAT RACING

FEATURES OF THE GRAND NATIONAL.

I BEGIN my look back on the Lincolnshire Handicap and the Grand National by making confession that in all I may have written on the race at Lincoln I certainly do not recall ever having mentioned the name of the winner, White Bud. Possibly the same thing could have been said of Light Dragoon, winner of the Cesarewitch last year, and certain other amazing winners of big races in recent times. In the case of White Bud, one was confronted with a six year old mare, nineteen times a runner as a four and five year old, her only win a five-furlong handicap. The handicapper had given her 6st. 5lb. as her portion, which neither flattered nor derided her. Before the horses left the paddock she caught my eye because she is undersized and "rabbity," with those lop ears which do not fail to give a horse a common appearance, though many good ones have had them.

Then, as you know, she won quite cleverly by a length from the good Roman Bachelor, whose success would have rejoiced the multitude, but offended the gods who happen to be concerned with these matters. For a moment or two I scarcely realised the identity of the rude intruder—as a rule this does not happen to those who are familiar with the colours, because they are racing every day—but it was certain that the winner was not a fancied horse. You knew so much from the stillness, for the roar, which was gathering strength as Roman Bachelor was putting up a stiff fight for it, was suddenly strangled, as it were. He just could not pull out the little bit extra, and that is how the 66 to 1 chance came to beat the public's horse. I hope the public generally did not lose a great deal over Tons of Money, but I am afraid they did. The craze for him began when Mr. James White and those associated with him blindly accepted the trials at Foxhill and never paused to reflect that Clochnaben might be an arch-deceiver on the trial grounds, as he ever was. What a good thing for them it was that the Liverpool Cup, which Clochnaben won very easily, was run the day after the Lincolnshire Handicap instead of the day before! Be quite sure that the Foxhill people do not accept the running of Tons of Money as correct. It takes a lot to break a point of view when once it has taken deep root in racing. Besides, there is a certain loss of conceit in admitting a mistake. Thus Tons of Money will be well backed again when he comes to run for the Newbury Cup, and I prophesy here and now that he will be well beaten. It is almost a worse case than Tishy's.

I think the running of Port Royal can be explained by the fact of the horse being entangled in the tapes when the start took place. In such a big field and with the pace so hot from the outset he could not work his way into the picture after that. I have little doubt that this horse, and a few others of those that were beaten, will be returned winners in due course; but I do not advise that the winner be followed, though there was not a suggestion of a fluke about her victory.

Beyond all question, the event of the week which interested us most was the Grand National Steeplechase. I am sure a great many people find far more pleasure in it than in the Derby; and as a sporting spectacle we may admit that there is no comparison between the two. I thought of this as I looked down on the masses of folk in the stands and enclosures and stretching far into the misty distance. I thought of it later when I came to see the race from the vicinity of the Canal Turn and Valentine's, a point of view which was entirely new to me. It was from there, by the way, that the Prince of Wales, whose love of the good horse that can jump is known to all the world, saw the race. Certain is it that His Royal Highness saw far more of this year's Grand National than did those in the best places on the grand stand. It was, indeed, a positive misfortune that a thick haze should have crept over the scene, blotting out most of it, except for the fortunate people at the Canal Turn.

There were seen the real thrills of the race. Arravale was noticed to be stopped at Becher's the first time round, and his trainer-rider, Mr. Percy Whitaker, afterwards explained that his horse had been forced into the wing. Poor, unfortunate Arravale! And yet, I never really thought he had an outstanding chance. It was the second time round that Forewarned, the favourite, fell at the fence before Becher's; but I thought when he passed us the first time round that he was not going too well. What did surprise me in a way, both times the horses flashed past at close quarters, was the strong gallop Sergeant Murphy was setting as he led the field. Then Shaun Spadah was there in a good place; and one that might well have won but for slipping up three fences from home, so well was he travelling, was Pencoed. This was afterwards borne out to me by two or three of the jockeys. It was some time later that I learned of Sergeant Murphy's splendid win from Shaun Spadah and Conjuror, with Punt Gun, Drifter, Max, and Cinders II also completing the course. Except for being slightly led over the water by Drifter, the winner made the whole of the running in very fast time, which, naturally, was chiefly contributed to by the perfect state of the going.

The winner is a thirteen year old horse by General Symons and was bred in Ireland. He has had a weird sort of career, and very early in it he changed hands for a mere trifle. However, he cost more when sold to an English starting price agent, who at the same time acquired Shaun Spadah. The latter was passed on to Sir R. McAlpine, and at once proceeded to win the Grand National. Sergeant Murphy showed that he was a rare stout-hearted jumper by the way in which he got the course at Aintree, but he was a horse with a funny mouth, and at that time took an awful lot of riding. However, Mr. J. Sanford, who in past years has made some big purchases of English blood-stock for his stud farm in the United States, paid £3,000 for Sergeant Murphy as a mount for his son, Mr. S. Sanford, who was at the 'Varsity in this country. The horse went to America, but came back and passed into the training of George Blackwell at Newmarket.

Last year, it will be recalled, he ran for the "National" and was ridden by C. Hawkins, who later was killed while riding in a hurdle race in France. It was at the Canal Turn that he darted across the guard rail and caused trouble to himself and several others. However, he was remounted to complete the course. During the past year he has frequently been ridden by the young Newmarket "vet.," Captain Bennet, who some time ago won his spurs as a very fine horseman in hurdle races and steeplechases. He became convinced there was a "National" in the old horse, and accordingly took tremendous pains with him to get his mouth right and impart all the confidence that quiet and efficient handling will do. Thus did he ride him in his races in public, and re-taught him how to jump straight. Make no mistake about it: chief credit for the triumph belongs to the young horseman for his big share in the riding of the horse preparatory to coming to Aintree this time. Then, throughout the race last week the pair were absolutely en rapport. I am told the old horse only put a foot wrong once, which was soon after reaching Valentine's the second time round. For the rest he jumped boldly, and even showed the way for practically all the long journey. Let me add that the young owner takes the very fine prize of £7,625. Last year Music Hall won £7,075 for his owner, Mr. Kershaw.

I must, of course, say a few words about the performances of the others. Shaun Spadah, for instance, ran a grand horse under his big impost of 12st. 7lb. I am afraid, after this, he is not likely to get much less next year, for he is one of those steeplechasers that belong essentially to Aintree and this hardest of all tests. What would have happened had Gerald L. been able to compete and had he stood up, I do not know, but on all form he had the beating of both first and second. We have to bear in mind that Shaun Spadah tried to give Sergeant Murphy no less than 18lb., and he was not beaten by such a great deal, after all. It was weight that stopped him from scoring another triumph, and, though we think for the most part only of the actual victor, it is only right that we should spare some admiration for the second when he has the attributes of a Shaun Spadah. May I also congratulate Mr. Dewhurst on riding his father's horse, Conjuror II, so very well as to take him into third place at the finish. It was a most meritorious performance on the young rider's part, and I rejoice that his father did not heed the common pleas that he should put up a more experienced jockey. Nothing could have been more sporting than the combination of this good and honest horse, Conjuror II, and the perfect amateur, Mr. Dewhurst.

It was less surprising that Turkey Buzzard fell than that Taffytus should have done so. I did not hear of any excuse for the fall of Forewarned, and, on the whole, I come to the conclusion that this horse will never win a Grand National. For one thing, he may not get the course, and for another, he does not jump quite in the right way. He gets his head too far down, and this makes for pitching at the big drop fences. This sort of thing, it seems to me, is courting trouble. It may be he has got into the habit because of wanting to save his still "dicky-looking" forelegs.

The Liverpool Foxhunters' Steeplechase was quite an attractive affair, since the riders had to be of the amateur status. With Captain Bennet associated with Gracious Gift, a horse with something rather better than a hunter's record, it is not surprising that the combination proved successful; and another year some provision should be made for penalising a horse with such a record as he has. He has been hunted, undoubtedly, by his owner in a bona fide way; but we know of him more as a finished steeplechaser than as a hunter: and at Aintree it was the finished steeplechaser that prevailed, with another useful 'chaser in Fluid Magnesia second. I delighted to see Percy Whitaker win the Champion Steeplechase on Silvo, a rare sort of jumper, and all good sportsmen gave horse and rider a rousing cheer when they returned to weigh. As regards the week's flat racing, it must be said that form was rendered most misleading at Liverpool by the bad starting. A newly licensed man was in charge, and the result was quite bewildering at times. The outstanding winners were Moabite and Star Chamber among the three year olds and Phaon of those that were beaten. Phaon is going to make a fine sprinter, and his defeat last week can be wiped out. It was caused by the over-confidence of his jockey.

It is clear that Jack Jarvis, the Newmarket trainer, is again going to have a successful season, since he won no fewer than six races in the week—two at Lincoln and four at Liverpool. Lord Rosebery's Vambrace disappointed him in the race won by Moabite, but it may be that the best was not seen of him, and he should be given another chance. Sir Robert Jardine's Brocklesby Stakes winner, Obliterate, by Tracery from Damage, is quite a nice sort that may train on, in which case he will differ from Brocklesby Stakes winners of recent times. Double Entendre, the winner of the Molyneux Stakes, had evidently been well galloped, though he only just streaked home a short head from Mr. Barclay Walker's filly by Happy Warrior from Clio, and the start generally was a hopeless one. The winner belongs to Mr. F. Straker, who bred him from the St. Frusquin mare Equitable. The colt is a Bachelor's Double. There were other interesting features of this first crowded and strenuous week of flat racing, but I have appropriated all the space at my command and, therefore, must break away. PHILIPPOS.

PHOTOGRAPHING THE BEWICK'S SWAN

ALARMED AND SWIMMING AWAY.

THOUGH the great expanses of sand-dunes fringing the South Wales coast do not in themselves attract wild fowl, during a wet winter such as the present one many species are to be found there on the large temporary pools formed by accumulations from the excessive rains; but they do not usually remain long unless hard weather sets in. It is therefore of especial interest to record the occurrence of a party of Bewick's swans, and the fact that they have remained in the locality for several months.

In our own county (Glamorganshire) the Bewick's swan has been an extremely rare visitor, one shot in 1895 being the only record until, on October 29th, 1921, the writer identified one on a large pool near the coast. However, early in November, 1922, there arrived in the same locality what was presumably a family party of the species, consisting of two adults and three juveniles, evidently birds of the year. After remaining a little over a fortnight they disappeared, but returned later with several additional adults, and at the end of February there were ten.

The writer and a friend, Geoffrey C. S. Ingram, determined to try to obtain a photographic record of these rare visitors, and, after reviewing the possibilities, set out with this end in view. A thirty mile run early on a cold March morning does not improve the circulation; but, leaving the car on the edge of the sand hills, these conditions were soon reversed when, carrying a heavy camera and accessories, one had necessarily to make long detours to avoid the flooded sand valleys filled up to a depth of 6ft. or so by the overflowing of the lake.

The birds were located on the shallow side of the lake, their favourite feeding ground, but which also offered least cover for approach, the ground being flat for several hundred yards from the water's edge, with only a few low, grass-covered sand mounds here and there.

Then ensued a long and exacting stalk, for we had to crawl through the wet, moss-grown willow scrub, not to mention numerous shallow pools, dragging our cameras, for a quarter of a mile before reaching the sand dune nearest the edge of the lake exactly opposite where the swans were feeding, with a few mallard and shelduck near them. An unwelcome diversion—two boys from one of the farms—now appeared, and the birds, very wary, at once moved out towards the centre of the lake and eventually drifted right across to the other side, three quarters of a mile away, splitting up into two parties.

Having failed in this first attempt, I fixed my camera with the lens through a tuft of grass and waited in hiding behind the sand hill for nearly an hour, when one party took wing and flew back to about two hundred yards to my left, the remainder following shortly afterwards, and here they stayed feeding, tantalizingly just out of range. Meanwhile, however, anticipating the possibility of this happening, Ingram had crawled away and, making a wide detour, appeared on the far side of the lake, moving quietly along the shore towards them. This had the desired effect, for, though he was half a mile away, the swans started to move along and eventually settled down to feed just opposite the little sand hill behind which I lay. The family kept pretty well together and it was interesting to note that the young birds had become much whiter than when they first arrived in November, practically only their heads and necks being very greyish and the pink base of their bills had changed to a colour more nearly approaching the bright yellow of the adults. They kept well away from the shore, but, taking advantage of a couple of short bursts of sunshine, I was able to make several exposures which, while not technically perfect, are an interesting record; the subjects of which are, doubtless, now on their long flight back to, possibly, Poland, perhaps North Russia, or even Siberia. ADULTS AND JUVENILES.

OUR GOLFING INVADERS

By Bernard Darwin.

THE names of the American team which Mr. Robert Gardner is to captain have now been published. They were certain to be formidable, and they are formidable. We miss some friends we should like to have seen again—Mr. Fownes, for instance, one of the most delightful of all golfers, who has captained two American sides; Mr. Bobby Jones, whose every stroke is a liberal education; Mr. Sweetser, the reigning champion; Mr. Guilford, his immediate predecessor and a magnificent player; and Mr. Knepper, who beat Mr. Tolley in last autumn's Championship at Brookline in a classic match. It is a pity that they cannot come, but their substitutes are very good ones.

Of the side that is coming, Mr. Gardner, Mr. Evans and Mr. Ouimet are so well known here that I need say little about them. Let me rather describe some who will be comparatively new to us. Mr. Max Marston, the best player in Philadelphia, was a member of last year's side at the National Golf Links, when he was beaten by Mr. Willis Mackenzie. He is a rather curious player in that he seems to play nearly every shot with the same long, full, deliberate swing. I never saw a good player who plays his lofted iron clubs with so decided a swing as opposed to a hit. It strikes one at first sight as a style that must go badly wrong now and again, but it does not. Mr. Marston is an extremely consistent player and is always there or thereabouts. I certainly should not expect him to be at his best on a cast iron St. Andrews in a seaside gale, but I daresay I should be quite wrong; for, whether or not his methods are contrary to the learning of the ancients, he does "deliver the goods." Mr. Harrison Johnston, who comes from St. Paul, was spare man to the American side last year, a position he won by beating Mr. Knepper in a trial match, and that by no uncertain margin. He is a golfer whom I shall expect to do very well over here. His game strikes me as one better suited to our seaside courses in a wind rather than to a cut and dried inland course with its windlessness and its watered greens. Mr. Johnston is young and strong and has a beautiful natural swing with one very curious feature. After his "waggle" is over he takes the club back a few inches, poises it in the air for a perceptible fraction of time and then goes on with his swing smoothly and easily as if nothing had happened. Incidentally, too, he is no overlapper, but has an old-fashioned palm grip.

Now I come to two older players, Mr. George Rotan of Houston, Texas, and Mr. Oswald Kirkby, a New York golfer. They are both, I take it, fairly well on in the thirties, which is a very, very advanced age according to American calculations. Mr. Rotan strikes me as more like a British than an American golfer. He has something less of methodical smoothness and more of slash. Like Mr. Johnston, he has a palm grip and he sits well down to the ball with hands rather near the ground. The swing is fast and full, but for all that he is very straight—in fact, whenever I saw him play, I put him down as one of the finest amateur wooden club players I had seen. He is sound all through, but it is his wooden clubs that are his strongest point. Mr. Rotan was one of the first American players we came across last autumn, and when we heard that he would not be on the American side we began to understand what we had to expect. We met him at Pine Valley, which is probably the hardest course in the world for a medal round, and in a scoring competition he went round it in 70. It was an amazing performance and had only one piece of luck in it. At the short fifth hole, more terrifying even than the High Hole coming in at St. Andrews, he plunged into a wilderness of fir trees that might have cost him ten, and he recovered so well that he got, I think, a four. Apart from that he did nothing "sensational"; he simply played the most perfect imaginable golf. Mr. Rotan is not the steadiest of players (another British trait), but he is horribly brilliant on occasions.

Mr. Kirkby was generally thought to be at his best before the war. When I met him last autumn he said he had not been playing much and talked rather as a looker-on, but if he is in form and in practice he is a fine player, with a graceful, powerful, leisurely style. He has won the Metropolitan Championship, which takes a lot of winning, and has been for years one of the leaders of the New York side in Inter-State matches for the Lesley Cup. Mr. Fred Wright, now described as of Los Angeles, but by upbringing a Boston golfer, was one of the side that beat us so terribly at Hoylake in 1921. In the International match he beat Mr. Holderness and was the last of his compatriots to disappear from the Championship, surviving to the sixth round. He is rather a deceptive player with an unorthodox left wrist, but he is strong and steady and a very fine putter with a cleek. When he was here before, it struck me that on the iron-hard Hoylake ground he tried too persistently to pitch with his "slotted" mashie, when he would have done better with a more running type of shot. He is an older and more experienced golfer now by two years and might be exceedingly dangerous. The other two, Mr. Herron and Mr. Willing, I am sorry to say I have not seen. Mr. Herron, who is a Pittsburgh player, has had a rather meteoric career in America. In 1919, being comparatively unknown, he won the Championship, and won it, moreover, with comparative ease, being only hard pressed once and beating the illustrious "Bobby" Jones in the final with something to spare. Since that, comparatively little has been heard of him, and it is a little hard to say exactly how good he is; but there is one point on which we need be under no delusion: anybody who can win through an American Amateur Championship nowadays is not to be lightly regarded.

Taking the team as a whole, I should say that it is not quite so good as was the Hoylake side, but it is very sound and solid. St. Andrews is not so trying to the stranger as it once was, but still it is very unlike the typical American course. It does not favour the shots that Americans play best, and it calls for some that they are not accustomed to play. I certainly feel much more hopeful about our team's chances at St. Andrews than if the match were played on some park-like inland course. I think we should have a good chance there. In fact, although I hardly like to say so, I think we ought to win. But we shall have to "do our darndest." There must no such paralysis set in as did at Hoylake.

FRIENDLY FOXES ON A CANADIAN FUR RANCH

THE PET.

A FURRY PLAYFELLOW.

A SILVER BEAUTY.

AN article which appeared in COUNTRY LIFE on November 11th last must have made the possibility of raising foxes for fur as a source of income a subject for consideration by many people, and the experience of a Canadian who, with very little money to spare, has started a ranch and made a signal success of the venture may be of further interest to them. Mr. S. Coll's silver-black fox farm is in Kent County, Ontario, and his ground serves a double purpose, the pens in which his foxes live being in a peach orchard. The young trees are in a very healthy state, and they in their turn have two uses: the production of their crop and the provision of all the shade that the occupants of the pens require. The pens are 24ft. square, and each has two dens 3ft. by 5ft. by 18ins. high with a 9in. entrance. The tops are hinged, so that it is easy to clean the dens, which are each provided with a saucer-shaped nest. The full-grown foxes are fed once a day, though the growing young ones get two meals, and during the whelping season a specially generous diet is allowed, including such dainties as milk, eggs and beef, bran, oatmeal and flour—horse meat is never given to them.

Where Mr. Coll's methods of dealing with his stock differ most from those of the pioneer British fur farm is in the fact that his foxes are made much of and treated almost, within limits, as domestic animals, instead of being regarded from a purely commercial point of view. Only during the mating season and when the cubs are very young does Mr. Coll decline to show anyone interested round the pens.

His foxes run to him when he goes among them, instead of disappearing into their dens, as happens on most fur ranches. This makes them, of course, extraordinarily easy to handle and control. Once or twice, when a young vixen has given birth to more cubs than she could well rear, he has taken two or three away and given them to a cat, and Tabby has made an excellent job of her foster-mothering. The young silver beauties have been as tame as cats themselves, running in and out of the house or coming at call and answering to their names. One beautiful vixen, when her master says, "If you love me, lassie, kiss my hand," comes at once and licks him; and the foxes, on their part, think nothing of climbing up behind his back, if he sits down in the pens, and twitching off his hat.

All this shows a very attractive side of fur farming, giving it an interest such as at first glance seems scarcely possible in the case of creatures generally regarded as cunning and savage and wild. Nothing but the greatest gentleness and real love for animals could win such trust from them. It must go hard with their owner when prudence indicates that the time for parting with some lovely full-coated young fox has come; but, after all, few of us who have kept chickens or rabbits for profit have been able to keep our relations with our creatures entirely commercial, and should we not have missed a great deal if we had?

BULBOUS IRISES.—II

By W. R. Dykes, M.A.

In the next section of the bulbous irises—to which the name of Juno has been given, merely as a label, apparently, and for no very good reason—the relative positions of the segments of the flowers are reversed, for the standards hang down or extend horizontally at the base of the falls. Another peculiarity of these Juno irises is that in their resting state in summer they have, attached to their bulbs, a number of thick fleshy store roots which seem to assist the bulb to make rapid growth in the spring. They then wither away and are replaced by another set which form with the new bulb for the following season.

As can be easily understood, bulbs with brittle roots attached are very easily damaged. Few gardening operations are more trying to the temper than the attempt to lift a number of bulbs of Juno irises without breaking the roots. It is only with great care that they can be got out uninjured, and, though it is true that the roots become much less brittle when they have been out of the ground for twenty-four hours, yet much damage is usually done, and bulb dealers can seldom supply perfect specimens. This is probably the reason why Juno irises are so little grown, and yet, there are among them some very valuable garden plants. I. alata, with broadly fringed falls and flowers of any shade of blue purple, grows round the western Mediterranean in Spain, Sicily and North Africa. It seems to like a fertile, rather heavy soil, and once sound bulbs are established in this country in a sunny, well drained position they will sometimes grow into big clumps and flower year after year in the early months of the year.

The most brilliant of all is I. Rosenbachiana from Turkestan, of which the flowers shoot up from the bare ground in January, February and March. They are of all shades of blue purple and red purple and very richly coloured. A strong plant produces three or four flowers in succession, and every seedling seems to be slightly different from all the others. The best way to grow I. Rosenbachiana is to devote a cold frame to it, for the flowers then last much longer instead of being beaten down by rain or snow. When the flowers are over, the leaves should be encouraged to grow as strongly as possible, but, when they wither, the lights may be put on the frame and left on until October, when they should be removed again and the soil allowed to get soaked with rain. Then in the early days of January the flowers will begin to appear and the frame should provide a constant display for nearly three months. I. Rosenbachiana is, unfortunately, a rare plant, but there is no reason why it should be so. The only real difficulty is in handling the bulbs carefully, for the roots are often as big as the bulb itself and very lightly attached. However, I have grown these irises now for nearly twenty years and raised several hundreds from seed. It is best to make a raised bed of rich light soil on which to stand the frame, and once the bulbs are planted they may be left undisturbed for three years.

A third fine Juno iris is I. bucharica from Bokhara. All the members of this section produce their flowers from the axils of the broad, glistening leaves, though this is more apparent in such tall species as bucharica than in the two dwarf plants already described. I. bucharica grows 15ins. to 18ins. high, and each plant bears five or seven large flowers of pure white tipped with vivid yellow. It is perfectly hardy, and a large group of I. bucharica against a sunny wall was for years one of the chief attractions of my garden in early April. Like most Turkestan plants it seems to prefer a rather sandy soil, and as it flowers late for a Juno iris, it is a very easy plant to cultivate.

Closely allied to it are the deep yellow I. orchioides and the rich purple I. Warleyensis, with both of which I. bucharica crosses readily, the best of the hybrids resulting, perhaps, from the cross with orchioides. This gives large, sturdy plants with flowers as large and broad as those of bucharica, but wholly yellow in colour like those of orchioides.

Asia Minor plants are often difficult to cultivate with success here, perhaps because the soil is a stiff loam or clay, which, in this country, would not become hot in summer, while in winter it would be far wetter than it is under the snow on the hills. It is, probably, for this reason that the very beautiful I. persica is so difficult to cultivate with success. The flowers are of a pale sea green tipped with brownish purple, with a central golden ridge on the blade of the fall; and, though this iris supplied the figure for the first plate of the Botanical Magazine in 1787, it is still a rare plant, and sound, perfect bulbs can seldom be obtained.

In the hills of Northern Mesopotamia there grows an allied species I. sindjarensis, with flowers of some shade of blue, but without any golden ridge on the falls. The two species have been combined in a beautiful hybrid, sindpers, which has the size of sindjarensis and the golden ridge of I. persica.

In various districts of Asia Minor there appear to be a number of species closely allied to I. persica, differing obviously in colour and in small botanical details. The best of these are the deep red purple Tauri and stenophylla or Heldreichii of two shades of blue purple.

Further east there are a number of species rarely seen, unfortunately, in cultivation: I. Willmottiana with broad, glistening leaves and oblong white blotches on a lavender blue ground; I. Tubergeniana, with yellow flowers bearded with a few straggling hairs; and the Afghan I. Fosteriana, with the extraordinary contrast of its deep purple standards and yellow falls.

The third section of the bulbous irises is confined to the extreme west of Europe, and its representatives are only found in Spain and Portugal, in the extreme south of France and in North-western Africa.

The origin of what every gardener knows as Spanish irises is I. xiphium, of which there are large and early flowering forms with rich blue flowers. These were crossed with yellow-flowered forms from Portugal, to which the name of lusitanica has been given, and the result has been a long series of colour forms. In recent years the name "Dutch irises" has been given to a set of hybrids obtained by crossing a fine, early flowering form of I. xiphium, which is often offered in catalogues under the pseudonym of I. filifolia. These hybrids flower in May with large and sometimes rather coarse flowers.

The real I. filifolia is a rare plant from the extreme south of Spain and from North Africa, and is distinguished by its rich red purple flowers. On the blades of the fall there is a broad band of gold, surrounded in most cases by a bluish halo. This species grows actually on the top of the rock of Gibraltar, and came easily from seeds in this country. After a few years, however, the bulbs became sickly and eventually died out, possibly because they fell victims to some disease.

There appears, indeed, to be some mysterious disease which is attacking all xiphium irises. It may be due to the eelworm, which caused such havoc among the daffodils, or it may be allied to the "mosaic" disease which causes so much damage among potatoes, but little seems to be known about it and little regard has hitherto been paid to it. However, anyone who has seen the specimens of I. tingitana on sale in florists' shops in the early months of the year must have noticed that the flowers were streaked with dark lines and the leaves with yellow.

This Iris tingitana from Tangiers is the earliest and finest of all the xiphium irises. Unfortunately, it will not flower in the open in our gardens unless the bulbs have been lifted and artificially ripened in the previous year. They should be dug up when the leaves collapse in July or August, and kept in dry sand in a warm place until November or even later, and then replanted in sandy soil well enriched with humus and old manure. The flowers are very large, of two shades of blue purple, and I. tingitana can be separated at once from I. xiphium by the presence of an inch-long linear tube between the top of the ovary and the base of the segments of the flower.

In North Africa there is also found the rich golden yellow I. juncea, and in Portugal the rare I. Boissieri, the only xiphium iris which is bearded. All these various species can be crossed, but the hybrids are not as good as their parents. For instance, I. Boissieri when crossed has its beard clipped back to half its length, and the rich gold of I. juncea becomes streaked and veined with the purple of all the other species.

All these irises like a dry, warm soil not deficient in lime. They may be planted in September and October, and the leaves will soon appear above the ground, though they do not then make much progress till the following spring. By the end of July or early in August the leaves will have withered away and the bulbs will be rootless. In well drained soil they may be left to take care of themselves, but in gardens where the soil is cool and moist they might with advantage be lifted, stored for two months in dry sand in a warm place and then replanted.

Those who will not take this trouble must content themselves with the Pyrenean I. xiphioides, which likes cool, moist conditions. It is a native of the Alpine meadows, especially near the Cirque de Gavarnie, where there is a constant supply of moisture in the soil. The colour of the flowers in the wild state is a deep blue with an occasional white form. In cultivation it has given rise to colour forms of every shade, from pure white through pale lavender and mauve to deep purple, but there are no yellow forms as there are of I. xiphium.

This iris is often known as the English iris, a name which it owes to the fact that it first became known to botanists three centuries ago as growing in the neighbourhood of Bristol. It is not, however, a native plant, but had been brought by sailors from the north of Spain. I. xiphioides flowers in June and, with the exception, perhaps, of some of the high mountain forms of I. xiphium, is the last of the bulbous irises to flower. When it is over there is a gap of several months before I. alata comes into flower in November and December. To fill this gap we have to rely on rhizomatous irises, which will be described later.

There is one advantage that bulbous irises have over some other bulbous plants, such as daffodils, snowdrops and lilies, and that is that if the bulbs are healthy and well ripened they are at their best every year, and not only in the second and third year after they have been transplanted. There are, in fact, two great classes of bulbs and corms: those which, like irises, tulips and crocuses, lose all their root fibres when they are dormant at some period of the year, and those which, like lilies, daffodils and snowdrops, are practically never rootless so long as they remain in the ground. Plants belonging to this latter class always suffer when transplanted and take at least a year to recover, while the others may with advantage be shifted every year, as the new roots which push out in the autumn will then come into contact with fresh soil. It is becoming increasingly obvious that the waste products of plant life do tend to poison the soil, as in the well known instance of the poor growth made by young fruit trees where the soil is covered with grass right up to their trunks. Those, therefore, who grow bulbous irises need never hesitate to dig up the bulbs when the leaves die down. The bulbs should, however, be stored in sand, for they are apt to shrivel if exposed to the air for any length of time.

With regard to the time at which the bulbs should be replanted, the following points may be considered. Of the winter-flowering species the flowers are produced almost as soon as growth begins at all. If, therefore, the flowers are wanted as early as possible, even at the risk of losing the bulbs, then the bulbs may be planted as early in the autumn as they can be obtained. The result will be early flowers, but there will be considerable risk that the foliage will be so damaged by bad weather in winter that no new flowering bulbs will be formed for the following year. Those gardeners, however, who have more patience should keep the bulbs in warm, dry sand so long as they remain plump and show no signs of beginning to make growth. They will then get flowers in due course and have the satisfaction of knowing that these well ripened bulbs have had the best possible chance of escaping injury to their foliage by the bad weather and, therefore, of forming good bulbs for the next season.

These considerations do not apply with so much force to the later-flowering species as to those which flower in winter or very early in the spring. Such bulbs as those of I. xiphium, I. tingitana and I. bucharica should, when out of the ground, be examined at intervals and replanted before they show signs of shrinking or of making growth. They will then be in the ground again in plenty of time to form their roots before growth becomes active in spring.

BROADLANDS—I.
HAMPSHIRE,
The Seat of
COL. WILFRID ASHLEY, M.P.

BROADLANDS is remembered by some and historically known to others as a country home of one of the most outstanding personalities among our nineteenth century statesmen. Born at Broadlands in 1784, Henry John Temple became owner of the estate and third Viscount Palmerston in the peerage of Ireland on his father's death in 1802. His political career lasted for sixty years—from 1806, when he failed to be elected to Parliament for Cambridge University, to October, 1865, when death found him still discharging the office of First Minister of the Crown.

Many of his letters are dated from Broadlands, where the room which he added, and in which they were written and much official work was performed, remains in all details as he left it. The house then was, and still continues to be, a fine example of our late eighteenth century style. But it became that by transformation, and still possesses much of the substance of the house that was visited by James I in 1607 and a sprinkling of the details of the alterations that had recently been effected when it was seen and described by Celia Fiennes in 1697.

At Romsey on the Test lay the ancient and aristocratic nunnery of which King Edward the Elder's daughter became first abbess in A.D. 907, and where Matilda, of the same blood, and afterwards Henry I's queen, was sojourning with her aunt, the abbess, while William Rufus was King. The abbey owned the manor, of which the lands covered some 10,000 acres, including the town and the country around, much of which was fertile valley land, especially the rich meads through which the river runs. Here were prizes indeed, obtainable by cash or favour when the abbey was surrendered to the King in 1539. Two years earlier he had married Jane Seymour, Anne Boleyn's head having been conveniently removed the day before. Queen Jane's brothers were fully alive to the opportunities presented to them by the combination of this marriage with the seizure of the monastic lands, and the younger one, Thomas Seymour, at once started on the unbridled race for pelf and power which brought him to the scaffold in 1549. So soon as the machinery for the suppression of the abbeys began to operate, his eye was on Romsey. One John Foster was the steward to the abbey, whose possessions included both Romsey Infra, more or less co-terminous with the present borough boundaries, and Romsey Extra, otherwise Broadlands, of which Foster held a lease. John Foster and Francis Fleming were of those who attached themselves to the then rising star of Thomas Seymour's fortunes; and it appears that, through Fleming, Seymour sent to enquire of the steward as to "the state of the House of Romsey, the rents of assize, and where they do lie and the riches of the same," and also as to whether the steward thinks "the Abbas with the rest of the Nunys wolde be content to Surrender their house." To the latter query Foster answers that they "wolde be loth to trust to the commissioners' gentylnes, ffor they here say that other houses have been strangely handeled." What happened is somewhat obscure. There is no grant to Thomas Seymour by Henry VIII, who, however, granted the manor of Romsey Infra to John Foster in 1544. After Edward VI's accession Seymour did obtain the Broadlands estate and he sold it to Fleming. The lordship of the manor of Romsey Extra remained with the Crown, and was only leased to Fleming by Queen Mary in 1558, in which year he died. He had held a post in the Ordnance Office under Thomas Seymour, and had been knighted as a reward for his conduct at the Battle of Musselburgh in 1547, the year when he purchased Broadlands. That he had transformed Broadlands into a suitable home and dwelt there for a considerable time is made clear by the inquisition held after his death, where we learn passing to his elder son William, who had married a daughter of John Foster. By her he had an only daughter, Frances. who married Edward St. Barbe of Ashington in Devonshire, They had several sons, and it was a younger one, Henry, who succeeded his Fleming grandfather at Broadlands in 1606, and will have been there, although not yet of age, when James I came on progress to Romsey and was entertained at Broadlands in 1608, as he again was in 1615 and 1623. that he had been "seized in his demesne as of fee long before his death," and that his widow survived him and was living on at Broadlands, which "capital messuage" was held of the Queen by the service of one-fortieth part of a knight's fee, and was worth £7 9s. 4d. per annum. Besides the manor house and household stuff, Sir Francis had left Dame Jane £115 and half his plate, thirteen fat bullocks, forty fat sheep, "half his swine and pulterye at his dairy," "All residue of his goods" lived to see the Commonwealth established, his younger son, Francis, having been killed at Newbury in 1643 fighting on the Royalist side. The elder son, John, had only held Broadlands for half a dozen years when he died in 1658, and his elder son, Henry, followed him to the grave three years later. These rapid successions were followed by an unusually long individual ownership, for John St. Barbe, who thus succeeded in 1661, lived on for sixty-two years. He made very considerable alterations in and about the house, many of which were set down by Celia Fiennes in her diary, so that, although the eighteenth century saw even more drastic changes, we are able, with her description and such details as escaped destruction, to picture the St. Barbe home. It had probably been built by the Flemings as a hollow square, resembling the still surviving Grove Place at Nursling, a few miles lower down the Test (COUNTRY LIFE, Vol. XVI, p. 774), which was built by a relation of the Flemings in the early part of Elizabeth's reign. Sir John St. Barbe (he was made a baronet in 1663) does not appear to have greatly altered the structure of the house, but to have laid out the William III forecourt and garden features and to have rearranged and refitted the interior. Thus, Celia Fiennes, who describes the house as "halfe a Roman H," approached it from the road between "Rows of trees in yᵉ avenues," and so reached "a Court thats wall'd in and blew Iron gates. ."

> Yᵉ Court has a Round in the Middle rail'd in, designed for a Bowling Green, and yᵉ Coaches drive round it to Come to yᵉ Entrance wᶜʰ is severall stone Steps to a broad Space that is railed wᵗʰ Balls and Banisters; yᵉ Space is paved wᵗʰ broad freestone yᵉ steps yᵉ Same 8 or 10.

The hall occupied the centre of the house, and in it Sir John seems to have introduced a fine staircase, probably resembling that at Hanbury Hall, (COUNTRY LIFE, Vol. XXXIX, p. 502.), for Celia Fiennes says:

> Yᵉ great hall is divided in halfe by yᵉ Staircase, Wᶜʰ hangs on its own work not supported of Either Side, to yᵉ first half pace and all yᵉ way up without Support, on yᵉ one Side, they are of oake, yᵉ railes and Banisters are varnished. Yᵉ halfe paces are Inlaid worke of a good Bigness yᵉ whole Compass of yᵉ Staircase.

There is no trace of this remaining, for, as we shall see, the house was much altered and enlarged in the latter half of the eighteenth century. But a "back Staires by yᵉ Kitchin" remains (Fig. 7), and also fine wainscoting with an acanthus carved frieze in the manner of Hampton Court lines the walls of the great chamber over the hall (Fig. 6). On the top floor, as at Montacute (COUNTRY LIFE, Vol. XXXVII, p. 820) and Chastleton (Vol. XLV, p. 90), Celia Fiennes still found the long Elizabethan gallery "that is Window all to the ffront and Leads to all yᵉ Chambers"; and from the gallery she went up into "a Cupilow which is in the Middle of the house, all Windows round and on yᵉ top had a Gold ball that holds several Gallons," a feature no doubt added by Sir John. While the exterior of the house was completely re-faced and re-fenestrated by the Palmerstons, the outbuildings were in some measure left as they found them, and so we still have the "very ffine Stable built of brick" (Fig. 4) which Celia Fiennes found that her relation had erected.

Sir John St. Barbe was the last male of his race, and when he died, in 1723, he left Broadlands to a distant cousin, Humphrey Sydenham of Dulverton, with instructions that it was to be sold to pay off the Dulverton mortgages. That he did not do at once, but put a farmer into the house, and thus the first Lord Palmerston found it when he purchased the estate in 1736. He was of a family that produced many public men, for Peter Temple of Stowe, who died in 1577, was alike ancestor to Sir William Temple, the seventeenth century diplomatist, and to the Earls Temple and Dukes of Buckingham, the eighteenth century Whig magnates — all men who loom large in our political annals.

Peter's youngest son, William, was secretary to Sir Philip Sidney and Provost of Trinity College, Dublin. His lawyer son, John, taking the Parliamentary side, published an account of the Irish Rebellion of 1641, depicting in rich Protestant colouring the horrors (which, no doubt, were quite as bad as those of the present day) of that Catholic rising. He had been Master of the Rolls in Ireland for many years when he died in 1677. It was his elder son, William, who was the statesman and diplomatist of Charles II's reign and the correspondent and husband of Dorothy Osborne The younger son, John, Speaker of the Irish Commons in 1661, retained the Whig principles of his family, and so was proscribed by the Irish Parliament that supported James II in 1689. But the Battle of the Boyne restored him to lands and office, and he acted as Attorney-General in the Green Island until 1695, when he retired to East Sheen where he died nine years later. He was succeeded in Irish lands and Surrey home by his son Henry, who, as a boy, was given an Irish sinecure office with £2,000 a year, sat in the English Commons as a supporter of Sir Robert Walpole, and obtained the Irish title of Viscount Palmerston in 1723. Keen on improving his means, he went to the City for a wife. In 1703 he married Anne Houblon, niece to Sir John, a founder and first Governor of the Bank of England, and sister to Sir Richard, a director of the Bank and a wealthy City magnate. But Sir Richard Houblon, although son-less, had a predilection for descent in the male line, and, dying in 1724, left the bulk of his fortune in trust to purchase estates for Jacob Houblon, a youthful second cousin. Although the Palmerston marriage was one of lasting affection, the new viscount was certainly chagrined at the testamentary disposition of his brother-in-law, and, in reference to his wife, spoke of "the great estate which should have been hers." Still, not only could he afford establishments in London and at East Sheen, but soon after her death in 1735 he was in a position to buy the Broadlands estate and spend a considerable sum on the renovations necessary after the period of occupation by Humphrey Sydenham's farmer. In 1736, when the purchase was made, Lord Palmerston's son, Henry Temple, was a widower, like his father, for the consumptive wife he had married in the previous year had died at Montpelier, and much trouble arose in order to bury a Protestant in a Catholic country. The young widower was probably still abroad when, in September, 1736, his father wrote him that he was employing many workmen at Broadlands doing the necessary things to make it a convenient and comfortable habitation:

> My first design is to remove the farmer out of the house and his stinking yard after him, so I am building him a house by his pigeon house. The Colonade and Tumbling Walls afford brick enough for it, so I propose a very large fine stable yard for myself inclosed within myself and all offices, as brew house, laundry, coach houses, wood houses, etc., on the side against the house down to the river from the stable.

Kent and Bridgman were then practising the new principles of "natural" or landscape gardening, and the new owner set to work to destroy the formal lay-out which Celia Fiennes only forty years earlier had found "not finish'd but will be very ffine." Palmerston informs his son that he is redoing the gardens as a slope to the river—which is to be "the main object of pleasure"—and so he is "giving away all the fine pyramid greens to those that will fetch them, of which many cartloads are gone already." On the whole he is enthusiastic over his new toy. He likes the place better than any he knows, and "here is plenty of all sorts of provisions, fish & flesh & fowle & cheap."

To ensure a line of heirs for title and estates was now important, and in 1738 both father and son re-married. It was none too soon, for the viscount had no further family, and Henry Temple died in 1740, a few months after his second wife had presented him with a boy.

Before that date the father had completed the work necessary to bring into order house and estate, and had added acres to the latter. A summary of his accounts survives, covering the years 1725 to 1756. The first period is concerned with expenses at Sheen, but in 1736 we get the entries:

July 3rd	Broadlands Houfe & eftate about it and timber &c bought of Humphrey Sydenham Esqre. cost	21,000l.
July 30th	ffor the writings	30l.

On March 25th, 1738, the expenses of renovation are summed up in the following item:

Laid out in buildings, repairs, garden, furniture of all kinds new, carriages, boats &c. to this day	3,317l

In the previous month he had handed over the purchase money for additions to the estate, and we read:

Feb. 3rd	Paid for Spurshott Farm and timber thereon, for Frilham farm and timber thereon coppices &c.	6805l
Feb. 9th	To Mr. Singer the buyer of it measuring the timber	68l 10l. 10s.

In the next year he made other exterior changes as follows:

Laid out in building Greenhouſe, Colonade, new Engine houſe, Leading houſe, water pipes &c., 1433l. 18s. 8d.

Whether this "greenhouse" forms part of the present temple-fronted orangery (Fig. 5), or whether none of that is earlier than the days of the second Viscount Palmerston, is uncertain.

In the same book we find careful entries of the dates of engagement and discharge of every description of servant, together with notes as to their conduct and character. In 1746 comes a new maid for "my wife," and, although she proves "a fine lady," she remains four years. A housemaid is endured for three years, but "abused the houſekeeper, very briſk, in a paſſion with my wife," and thus departed. On the other hand, a coachman proves "an excellent good sert" and eventually takes a farm, whereas "Harry Jones Poſtilion" proved a "Drunken naughty, saucy boy."

Aged eighty-one, the first Lord Palmerston died in 1757, and was succeeded by his grandson, who was still a minor. Broadlands House and the sporting over the estate were therefore let to Lord Powis at a rental of £100 per annum, the tenant to keep up the gardens. The young owner completed his education by foreign travel, which gave him a fondness for Italy and its arts. Thus he was again abroad in 1767 when he met and formed an attachment for Frances Poole, a lady of much charm but some years his senior. The marriage which ensued was of as short duration as that of his father with his first wife, for Lady Palmerston died in 1769. It was probably while she was still alive that he formed the plan of bringing Broadlands house into harmony with the taste of the day. The work may have begun before her death, and appears to have been carried out at two periods, the second one dating from after his second marriage in 1783. Some years after that John Latham, retired doctor and famous ornithological writer, was living at Romsey and collected materials for a history of the place which still lie in manuscript at the British Museum and formed the basis of a paper on Broadlands contributed by Mrs. Suckling to one of the Hampshire Field Club's volumes (1904–6). Writing not long after the death of the second Lord Palmerston in 1802, Dr. Latham tells us of the house that—

> The late lord about 35 years ago greatly modernised the whole, pulling many parts of the old mansion down and bringing the whole into a square form cased it with white brick, giving, at a distance the appearance of stone.

He adds that at the time of the 1736 purchase the house was windowed in late seventeenth century casement fashion and was in the form of the letter H. That implies that the sides or wings of the house projected from the central or hall portion to the west as well as to the east, although Celia Fiennes describes east or entrance side projections only. The "square form" which was given to the house by the 1768–79 alterations obliterated all evidence of the original disposition to the west (Fig. 2), for here we now find a normal Late Georgian nine-windowed front with a great portico projecting from the central third (Fig. 3). The impression given is that the whole of this was an addition, and not merely a filling in of the centre and reconstitution of the ends. It is therefore quite likely that Celia Fiennes' description of "half a Roman H," rather than Dr. Latham's of a whole H, is correct. As to the east side (Fig. 1), there is no doubt as to what happened. Here the projection of the sides was very considerable—about 40ft.—and the "squaring" took the form of introducing a portico (Fig. 9) between the projections, and running, between it and the hall, a passage curving out into a rotunda at its middle. The remaining portions of the hollow are open and form an enclosed court into which Sir John St. Barbe's great chamber (Fig. 6) looks. The hall (Fig. 10) was reconstituted in Classic-wise to accommodate the statuary and other forms of old Roman and Italian sculpture collected by the second Lord Palmerston, of whom Dr. Latham observes:

> His lordship was a gentleman of acknowledged taste himself and was further assisted in the undertaking by Mr. Holland the architect.

The results of this co-operation will be further illustrated and described next week.

H. AVRAY TIPPING.

MODERN CRITICISM OF TENNYSON*

IT is nearly a hundred years since Charles and Alfred Tennyson, after selling "Poems by Two Brothers" to Mr. Jackson, a bookseller of Louth, for £10, ran off to Mablethorpe to celebrate the event. After that, Alfred Tennyson was to write many volumes and eventually to become the muse of the Victorian Era. During his long life he had the spiritual world of England at his feet, and the temporal world also. Nearly all the great men of the time have left behind them impressions of the great, handsome man, with his shaggy beard and tender eyes, who used to go about in a picturesque coat that gave him the air of a romantic bandit. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of his career was that his art made steady progress from the boyish rhymes which he was lucky enough to sell till his old age, when his mastery of his art had grown perfect with long usage. In it he wrote, among other things:

> When the dumb Hour, clothed in black,
> Brings the Dreams about my bed,

—a piece equally fine in its technique and its imaginative feeling. The words are nearly all monosyllables and are so knit together that they bring not only a picture but an atmosphere to the mind at once. The admiration of the great contemporaries, Carlyle, Gladstone, Dickens and Thackeray, George Eliot and the Brontës, stopped little short of idolatry.

One would have thought it scarcely possible to make out an indictment against a poet so perfect, and one so equally loved by the highly gifted and shy Fitzgerald and Queen Victoria. It is true that no poet could have written so much without some of the pieces being weaker than others. In his own time, critics did not hesitate to point out flaws in what many conceived his masterpiece, the "Idylls of the King." They were modernised, and Mallory's fine old English was turned into drawing-room language; but then, we must consider the difference between the time in which he wrote and the present time. Mallory has, nowadays, been popularised in the original, and his best passages are to be found in prose anthologies and collections of that kind. Though not a discovery in the early part of the nineteenth century, his charm was known only to a comparatively small number of scholars. Now, everybody knows King Arthur's great comradeship and the adventures of the knights. Another piece had a very great value at the time when it was written, namely, "Locksley Hall." Mr. Fausset applies a false standard to it. He fastens on such phrases as:

> . . . —having known me—to decline
> On a lower range of feelings and a narrower heart than mine!

The critic says that the passion is "forced and metallic," and the "assumption of superiority by the jilted lover is almost farcical." It was not looked upon in that light when it was written, but as a sort of marching song of progress. Tennyson expresses something of the feeling of his own time in such lines as the following:

Men, my brothers, men the workers, ever reaping something new:
That which they have done but earnest of the things that they shall do:

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rain'd a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south-wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunderstorm;

Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law.

It was that vision of the future that stimulated the nineteenth century to an exertion of energy such as is unparalleled in history.

It was the same with his country idylls. Of one of them, "The Grandmother," Mr. Fausset speaks with utter contempt. Of it he says that, except for a recollection of the little son whom Tennyson had lost at birth, it was "otherwise well suited by its lack of vernacular veracity to impress the senior class of a village Sunday school." The beauty of the very simple idyll just lies in the perfect expression it gave to the moods of the old woman without turning it into the dialect of East Anglia, which, we suppose, is the meaning of the phrase "its lack of vernacular veracity." Compare it with the work of William Barnes, and it will be seen at once that the Dorset poet gained very little by writing in the patois of Dorsetshire what could have been equally well done in ordinary English. Henley, no bad judge and no extravagant admirer of Tennyson, thought this was his best poem. In not a word or phrase did the poet depart from the vision he had of the frail old body calling up her loves and rivalries, and what, no doubt, appear to Mr. Fausset as the very minor and insignificant incidents of her life. In his "Northern Farmer"—Old Style—Tennyson showed a perfect command of the vernacular. We venture to suggest that there is more real poetry in those country idylls than there is in "The Charge of the Light Brigade," of which the critic says that after reading:

. . . a description of the charge of the Light Brigade, in which occurred the words "someone had blundered," Tennyson's martial fervour picked up the step of that phrase and galloped with the Six Hundred through the jaws of Death, "to the mouth of Hell," in six of the most vigorous stanzas he ever penned. It was done in a few minutes, and happy as it was in its intention and its execution, it was equally happy in its effects upon the poet's personal reputation.

Yet he cannot help throwing a sneer that by the publication of this poem "Tennyson became a revered and representative Laureate."

He had won the heart of those mild and respectable masses who nourish in secret dreams of violence and gallantry, and look to a poet to rattle the sabre for them, and to relieve drab days by flaunting in perfect security the banners of war.

Evidently Mr. Fausset is no patriot, and expresses his difference of opinion in the following passage, which is very characteristic of the writer:

Such love and such honour with their challenging complacency invite opposition. Thus, to the accompaniment of sounding phrases was the unassuming spirit of true Freedom harnessed between the shafts of cautious policy in the mid-nineteenth century, and driven to ruin in the twentieth. Tennyson was among the first to wave the whip, not because his intentions were evil, but because here, too, he lacked intellectual honesty and fearlessness. Quite unconsciously he compromised his love of man by his sentiment for his country, his desire for peace by his fear of war, his international tolerance by a certain racial snobbery, hard, indeed, in all but saints and seers to eradicate and likely particularly to flourish in the heart of a satisfied moralist. Tennyson, by his influence, as a poet widely read and reckoned high-minded, gave an undoubted lead to self-satisfied national arrogance. It was not his intention, but it is hard to forgive him the consequences.

He, as will be seen, is not giving voice to the judgment of the twentieth century, but to the opinions of those who talk not for a nation, but for those who profess little doctrines that never have been found to serve as safe guides in the government of nations. Every sane man hates war, but in this world of countries with varying ambitions and varying ideals it has hitherto been found impossible to avoid the clash of arms, and when a poet is condemned because he sings of patriotism the country is in a parlous condition.

Mr. Harold Nicolson's book takes the form of a critical biography. After a discussion on what is called "The Tennyson Legend" there comes a series of chapters of which the titles almost tell the story—Somersby, 1809–28; Cambridge, 1828–31; The 1830 and 1832 Volumes; The Ten Years' Silence. If we assume that the impressions of childhood form the material out of which poetry is made, the most important of these places is Somersby. Lincolnshire is not a county of magnificent scenery, yet it has characteristics that could not fail to impress the poet's temperament. The "dry, dark wold," on the "long gray fields at night," the little brook that babbles past the Rectory, the plain and the marsh—these form the scenery and the dramatis personæ that were to become immortalised in Tennysonian poetry, and represent that which lay closest to the poet's heart. Mr. Nicolson has obviously studied Tennyson-land with assiduity, but he has scarcely entered into the spirit of it. Nevertheless, he tries to hold the balance fairly between those who feel antipathetic to the greatest of the Victorian poets and the others who claim that he is still the supreme artist in English letters and that the Victorian Era owed much to the stateliness and uprightness of his character. He lays stress on the man's shrinking timidity and his self-depreciation. A favourite saying of Tennyson was that we are all rushing to obscurity, some a little faster than others, but all on the same path. To William Barnes he once said: "Modern fame is nothing: I would rather have an acre of land. I shall go down, down. I am up now. Action and reaction." The Duke of Argyll when introduced to him said: "I am so glad to know you," and Tennyson replied: "You won't find much in me—after all."

One of the faults found in him by the author of Tennyson—Aspects of His Life Character and Poetry, is that "obsession of accuracy, being a symptom of the Victorian dislike of imagination." As an example of it he introduces: "Let the great world spin for ever down the ringing grooves of change," and criticises Tennyson's note subsequently added. The inspiration of the verse had been drawn from a railway engine and had been rendered inaccurately. Tennyson's note is:

When I went by the first train from Liverpool to Manchester (1830) I thought that the wheels ran in a groove. It was a black night, and there was such a vast crowd round the train at the station that we could not see the wheels. Then I made this line.

The line justifies itself and does not at all depend on the mistake about the railway.

The book will, we think, be read with very great pleasure by those who retain their allegiance to Tennyson, because, in spite of some meticulous criticism of this kind, there is in it a frank recognition of the greatness of the poet.

Memories of The Future, by Ronald A. Knox. (Methuen, 7s. 6d.)

IT is disappointing to have to record that Memories of The Future proved less amusing than we joyously expected it to be. Quite possibly the author would agree with us, for the idea of the book is just one of those that sounds enchantingly funny at the outset, and then reveals all sorts of unexpected difficulties as the work progresses. The idea is that "Opal, Lady Porstock," born in 1915, writes her Memoirs in 1988, and so her "editor" has an opportunity to satirise all the leading discoveries, fads and fashions of our own day. It will easily be seen how tempting this idea is while an author is still in the stage of jotting down chapter headings: Childhood, Schooldays, Oxford, On the Sick List, My Marriage, Home Life, My Parliamentary Election, and so on. And if each chapter had been rigorously confined within, say, the limits of a newspaper article, all might still have been well. But two hundred and forty pages is too great a load for the idea to bear; it means that the wit has to be spread rather thin, and wit spread thin has a terrifying tendency to become mere tedium. Nor is this the only drawback. The author is a man and "Opal, Lady Porstock," a woman, a fact that, except in the case of supreme artists, produces subtle dislocations in the telling of a story. Thirdly, for satire, the impartiality, the detachment of a god is necessary, and this the author has not, in the dangerous amount of space at his command, been able to achieve; his own opinions emerge fairly clearly on most subjects, and in the chapter dealing with religion there is at least one page that is propaganda unadorned. It would be very unfair not to acknowledge that there are many delightfully funny skits in the book; and here is one of the stories: "The shops themselves, before the London Improvement Act, had grown to an enormous size: they used to tell an irreverent story of a very ungodly young gentleman who died while shopping at Selfridge's, and for quite a long time afterwards could not be persuaded that he had got further than the basement." But, taken as a whole, the supply of fun and irony is not quite equal to the heavy demands of a full-length novel.

A St. Luke of the 19th Century, by Mrs. Russell Barrington. (Longmans, 7s. 6d.)

THIS "old-fashioned story about a few gentlemen and gentlewomen, and some others, who lived during the reign of Queen Victoria" (we quote the sub-title) is a curious book to be published in these hurried days, for it must be admitted that the Victorian spirit is, by accident or design, very completely caught and kept. There is many a novel written about those days in a critical twentieth century mood, but this book has no touch of criticism in it and no hint of the shifting values of our own times. Everything is poised, secure. To recapture that bygone sense of security must be, we should have imagined, almost an impossibility, yet it is achieved without any perceptible effort. But for the date on the title-page, one would think the book had been actually written thirty years or more ago. Life in it flows smoothly with just the ripples of distress necessary to make a story at all, and people behave beautifully, though it were to their own hindrance. Art and music and nature have due recognition, and the spiritual side of things is not ignored; yet, the life seems strange to us because it is untouched by that troubled spirit that so often leads us astray and yet, in the end, will lead us aright and which is our only hope of salvation now that the world is upside down. For we are more distressed, though, perhaps, in a helpless, undisciplined way, about the unhappiness of other people than are the sheltered, gracious ladies in this book; and, though we do not know yet how to rectify matters, the troubled spirit may straighten things out in the end. But for the moment how one longs for the security and leisure to be found in Mrs. Russell Barrington's pages! Luke Faulkner, "artist and healer," does not dominate the story at all, strange to say, but we are always glad when he does appear. The title refers to him, but is taken from Rossetti's lines:

"Give honour unto Luke, Evangelist,
For he it was (the ancient legends say)
Who first taught art to fold her hands and pray."

There is rather a bewildering number of people in the book—indeed, we have known a reader compile a private "Who's Who" for reference as he read—or, perhaps, it is that there are too many stories running side by side: those of the three daughters of Sir Harry Lavaine and that of the second marriage of Sir Harry himself, preceded by reminiscences of his first. Elaine is, we feel, the writer's favourite of the three sisters, yet she seems vaguely tiresome at times in spite of her beauty and talent, whereas the high-spirited Ella, in her dull married life and quiet widowhood, is fine all through and invests her hapless love with a dignity which is completely natural and convincing. LACOCK CHURCH AND VILLAGE.—I

By H. Avray Tipping

THE Dissolution Commissioners, in 1539, describe Lacock Abbey as "set in a towne," and, indeed, the broad market-holding High Street connects the road passing from Chippenham to Melksham with the Abbey entrance. It was already a well inhabited and flourishing section of her great estates when Ela, Countess of Salisbury, founded her Augustinian nunnery, became its first abbess and endowed it with the estate which has ever since been held in conjunction with the Abbey, although that has been a lay residence for almost four centuries. The town has four streets with right-angled corners forming outer rows, and an inner square of habitations. Coming southward from Chippenham and crossing the stone bridge over the Lacock brook, we soon reach the side street that runs eastward to the church, which, with its ample graveyard, occupies much of the space between the little East Street and the Abbey demesne. On this spot—even before Ela and her nuns established themselves in the Abbey buildings when Henry III was king—the folk of the township will have gathered for worship; but there are no visible traces of the church of that day, although, in the course of somewhat drastic nineteenth century "restorations," there were found "a great many Norman stones, re-used as building material by the later builders." These later builders were at work at various periods, but the most striking features of the church belong to the fifteenth century. There are, however, considerable fourteenth century portions, and, until its roof was raised and altered in 1861, the whole of the north transept (Fig. 1) was of that period, and not merely the windows and portions of the wall. The lower part of the tower also belongs to the fourteenth century, but the upper part and the spire were added in the fifteenth century, when, even for walling, rubble stone was exchanged for ashlar, and very rich work was introduced in the church. The nave (Fig. 5) is dignified, with high two-light clerestory windows above the arcade, and with transept and chancel arches rising up to the full height of the clerestory fenestration. The whole span between the top of the chancel aisle and the wagon roof is taken up by a six-light window, rich in its interior, but richer still in its exterior features (Fig. 2). Filled in with elaborate tracery, its arch is surmounted by a frieze of running vine pattern, and above that by an open arcading following the line of the arch and ignoring that of the roof behind it. The gable peak, however, was originally somewhat masked by a niche, of which only the base remains. Of its very rich character not only the base bears witness, but also the character of the niches that survive at the west end of the north nave aisle and the east end of the chantry or north chancel aisle. The former has, above the main figure recess, a set of subordinate niches, forming the lower section of the canopy, and when every niche had its statue the effect must have been admirable. Even now, as we approach down Church Street (Fig. 3), the aisle with its windows, its pinnacles and its niche, associated with the stair turret and beyond that with the porch and tower, forms an arresting group. The somewhat unusual tracery of the five-light west window of this nave aisle is similar to, although by no means identical with, that of the east window of the chantry (Fig. 4), the date of which was established, within a decade, by the late Mr. Charles Talbot, whose paper in the twenty-eighth volume of the "Wiltshire Archæological Magazine" is before me. Between window and niche base is a corbel taking the usual form of an angel clasping a shield. "The arms on this shield long defied detection, being apparently two straps in bend linked together by two rings." But in 1895 Mr. Brakspear, during a close inspection for exact measurement purposes, perceived that the supposed bend was a saltire, and that enabled Mr. Talbot to identify the arms as those of Robert Nevill, who held the Salisbury see from 1427 to 1437. That may, therefore, be taken as the most active period of the fifteenth century rebuilding of the church, although Mr. Talbot found structural reasons for concluding that the nave arcade was built after the north aisle.

The chantry (Fig. 6), which, with its elaborately groined vault, is as finished a piece of Perpendicular work inside as out, appears to have belonged to the Bonhams of Wyck, an estate purchased by Sir Henry Sharington, who thus was enabled to use the chantry as a place of family burial. The tomb of his elder brother, Sir William Sharington, bearing date thirteen years later than his death in 1553, has been previously described and illustrated. It blocks up one of the two north windows of the chantry (Fig. 1), while in front of the other was erected a monument of fine Late Renaissance type, to Sir John Talbot, which, having been removed and stored away in pieces, has lately been reassembled as the nucleus of Lacock's war memorial, facing the west end of the High Street. Sir John, as we have seen, was succeeded in possession of the Abbey by his nephew, John Ivory, in 1714. The latter's zeal for the "Gothick taste" and his rebuilding of the hall of the Abbey would lead us to expect that such eighteenth century work in the Gothic manner as we find at the church would be undertaken at his initiative; but an inscription painted under the east window of the chantry tells us that the chancel was rebuilt in 1777, five years after his son had succeeded him. Probably the chapel groining and the Sharington tomb were recoloured at the same time. It is rather coarsely done, but the toning of age has mellowed it pleasantly.

An interesting feature of the south side of the church is a seventeenth century three-storeyed annexe to the south transept, which has been described as an ancient house afterwards thrown into the church. The south transept itself was the place of sepulture of the important lords of the manor of Lackham, within the parish of Lacock. Dating from the reign of Henry VII is the fine brass to Robert Baynard and his wife and children. More than a century later his descendant, Sir Robert Baynard, set up, on the wall, tablets to his father and his wife, and these are of especial interest as being rare survivals of elaborately painted oak work of Jacobean times, such as we find in the Kederminster pew and library in Langley Church. These tablets are a pair and are dated 1623. The one illustrated (Fig. 11) is that to Sir Robert's wife, who was a half-sister to the first Sharington Talbot. We have seen the heiress of the Abbey, Olive Sharington, first marrying John Talbot of Salwarp, and afterwards Robert Stapleton, whom Archbishop Sandys of York found overbuilding himself. It was their daughter Ursula who is commemorated by the tablet, whereof the half columns and other portions imitate marble, while the whole of the painting, including the heraldry, forms a charmingly coloured composition.

But a more precious possession of the church is its fifteenth century cup (Fig. 12), now used as a chalice. The treble cresting set on a rope band, and the ball top with rope band round its centre, are gilt, and the entire height is 13¼ins. When and how it came to Lacock Church is not known. In the year of Sir William Sharington's death Royal Commissioners, in search of legalised loot, found only 20oz. of silver at the church, which they were good enough to leave. As the cup weighs 9oz. more than the Commissioners found in all, it cannot have been there then. It has no mark of any kind, but is a very charming piece, dating, probably, from the last years of the Plantagenets.

North of the church stands a house (Fig. 7), no doubt of late fifteenth century origin and originally a shop, for its south side still shows remains of the open oak arcades such as we find well preserved at the so-called "Abbots House" in Shrewsbury, in which town shops of this late mediæval character survived in large number into the nineteenth century. Another example is the house by the church at Writtle in Essex. Lower down Church Street we come across a house with a fourteenth century stone doorway (Fig. 8), and next but one to it is the Old Angel Inn, now LadyShippard's. The oak framing is plastered over, but the moulded beam of the overhang shows, and is supported, where the recessed porch occurs (Fig. 9), by an under beam formed as the head of a four-centred arch with foliage carved spandrels. The stone doorway has an arch of similar form and also carved spandrels. It is a charming sixteenth century composition, showing no trace of Renaissance influence, whereas the arch to the chimney corner (Fig. 10) is losing the Gothic spirit, and yet exhibits the local and conservative instincts of the Lacock master masons and carpenters under the Tudors.

FAREWELL TO CITIES

By Stella Benson.

IT is interesting to see how the centre of the world changes. Londoners, I suppose, still think of themselves complacently as occupying the centre of the world. From every side tourists still converge on the Poets' Corner in Westminster Abbey; there is standing room only this morning in every City-bound electric train; the number of people with the word London on their lips at this minute is probably greater than the population of China. But we exiles have forgotten London; our world has shifted its axis. To us Hong Kong with its narrow, twisted, leaping streets, its moon-like swinging paper lanterns, its abrupt heaped hills and its strident, clattering populace is the metropolis now. It is all a matter of comparison and proportion. We are bound now for a truly remote destination. Our dwindling week in Kong Kong is our last hold on the world, on cities of ease and plenty, on shops running over with milk and honey and Three Castles cigarettes and Chivers' jellies and American patent fasteners.

Hong Kong can worthily sustain an illusion of being the temporary centre of the world. Noise is a great factor in giving a central impression. If London's desultory campaign against noise should ever be carried through successfully, London would, I believe, at once lose her position as premier business city. What investor would ever believe in the commercial possibilities and wealth of a city in which motor 'buses and brewers' drays should glide along like wisps of thistledown, in which errand boys should speak in refined whispers, in which buildings should be erected noiselessly like flowers growing. Noise is part of bustle, and it is bustle, as the Americans have discovered, that makes money move.

Hong Kong knows all about noise. The tumult and the shouting—contrary to the poet's statement—never die, even when the captains and the kings have all departed to the Peak in the six o'clock funicular tram. Hong Kong trams—whether their route is horizontal or almost perpendicular—have the loudest bells and the clankiest gait in the world; two cheerful barefooted coolies carrying a Sedan chair can make almost as much noisy fuss in a street as a fire engine; the most casual word of warning uttered by a Hong Kong motor horn has to be repeated crescendo about a dozen times before pedestrians vacate the middle of the road; the Sikh policemen can only retain their authority by means of a ceaseless clamour; swarms of American tourists exchange their impressions in tones as far as possible removed from a whisper; Chinese dogs are less reserved than the lions at the Zoo at feeding time; and, through all the hubbub the noise of the Chinese children penetrates as they run along the arcades in their heavy wooden clogs—the clogs always tuned accurately against each other——sol—doh—sol—doh.

The memory of London is drowned for us in this immediate noise. We feel central still; we are part of the world's bustle still. Next week we shall be very quiet and provincial in the hills of Yunnan province—China's farthest south. So to-day, with a feeling of farewell, we must hurry about on hard pavements and write little lists, and lose them: We want a servant—and soap—and a case of whisky; we must put on our best clothes; we must meet So-and-so at such a place; we want a yard of elastic and two pearl buttons. . . .

Domestic shopping for a very remote household and engaging Chinese servants are new experiences. What does one need for a house one has never seen, a house six days from the nearest English shop? Our lists resemble Futurist poems: pâté de foie gras and an Annamite dictionary . . . quinine and two flat-irons. . . . It remains for the shopman to suggest the humble vulgar necessities that would never occur to our cultured and over-anxious minds—washing soda . . . flour . . . Dutch cleanser . . .

Prospective servants appear as mysteriously as fairies in our room. Some ply us with pidgin French, some with pidgin English, some with a language entirely unintelligible to us. But they all share that mysterious quality of fairies, seeming to have no past and—as far as we are concerned—no future.

"My b'long velly good number one boy," says the servant with simple confidence. "Chits (references) no have got. One piecee master have gone away just now long time. One piecee master b'long velly bad man, no makee chit my."

"No chit, no wanchee," we say firmly and epigrammatically.

The boy imperturbably vanishes and is replaced by an almost identical boy whose fine opinion of his own virtues and powers is similarly unsupported by any outside evidence.

It does not matter; it all helps to give us the bustling city feeling. It may be long before we bustle again.

CORRESPONDENCE

THE CASE FOR HOME PRODUCTION.

To the Editor.

Sir,—Your very interesting article on the above affords food for much reflection. It is admitted on all sides that arable land is fast going out of cultivation; but, surely, this is not due to the dumping of foodstuffs you mention, but to the higher cost of wages, local rates, taxes, material, machinery and high rail rates. The average sale price of wheat, barley and oats last week was 2s. 3d., 1s. 1d. and 2s. 7d. per hundredweight higher than in 1913. You state the increase of 2½ millions in imported foodstuffs is not due to demand but to surplus dumping, but is this quite the case? I have lived for thirty years among farmers and labourers, and nothing strikes me more than the increase of ideas and requirements as to what is needed by the agricultural workers. Their standard of living is fully 50 per cent. up as regards food, and their taste has changed, apart from dress, pianos or gramophones. Please do not for a moment think I grudge it them—far from it. We only live once, and if it tends to increased happiness and comfort, by all means let it be so. I refer more to the class of articles now bought. Watch every country town on a market day, and note what is bought by the womenfolk. Foreign bacon—80 per cent. of them could not cure a pig now—tinned fruits and jam, biscuits largely bought, and machine-made bread. Gone for ever is the homely, thrifty wife who baked her own bread, which was good wholesome bread, too—a meal in itself, almost. The consumption of sugar is much higher now than in 1913—any country shopkeeper will tell you this—and as the price is now some 50 per cent. above 1913, may not this account for part of the 12 millions increase you mention? More intensive cultivation is suggested as a remedy, but unless a market is assured for the produce, one fails to see this as a cure for the evil. At the time of writing I know of a farmer who does work his land on intensive production lines, and he has on hand now—and unsaleable except at a loss—some 200 tons of carrots and 30 tons of onions. The proposal that one-fifth of the land now in grass should be ploughed out would be viewed with apprehension by all farmers; and, surely, the question of deeper ploughing depends entirely on the nature of the subsoil. There are vast numbers of keen, shrewd, practical farmers extant, and if this was the panacea for the evil, one may be sure it would have been done. Whether a million more cows would pay or not is surely open to question. In the first place, the erection of cow-houses for the million, to conform to by-laws, would ruin the average landlord or owner-farmer; and secondly, where are the extra 700 or 600 million gallons of milk to be consumed, and at what price? If Sir Charles Fielding advocates his proposals with a protection tariff on imported things, the superficial aspect changes. At the present time we export mill offals to Denmark and buy back her excellent butter and bacon—the latter is now being sold in the country at 9½d. per pound. As Sir Charles Fielding is a practical farmer on a fairly extensive scale, it would be of great interest if he would send you a statement of his profit and loss account for 1920–21 and 1921–22, showing his rent, local rates, taxes, wages, and stating the acreages of corn, yields and prices. It might encourage others. The root of more than half the trouble is high railway rates—and excessive middlemen's profits; but time presses, and unless rail rates fall largely and at once, many more farmers and market-gardeners will go under, so no time is to be lost.—Also a Farmer.

BOX HILL AS A SANCTUARY.

To the Editor.

Sir,—There is no doubt in my mind, from some forty years close acquaintance with Box Hill and its past and present wild inhabitants, that the Hill presents an opportunity of forming the finest sanctuary near London. Fortunately, the preservation of wild life is receiving more and more attention, and already sanctuaries exist and are being formed in our London parks, due largely to the efforts of the increasing number of the nature-loving public. I firmly believe that if the National Trust declared their intention of making Box Hill into a sanctuary, and carried it out in a practical manner, their appeal for funds would receive considerable response from a source hitherto untouched, while they would be doing a national service of great value in the interests of natural history and its ever-increasing number of students. If the National Trust favours my proposition, they must act, and act quickly, if the remnants of the Hill's wild life are to be saved, for the war of extermination goes on, and soon the slaughter will be complete: the squirrels, alas! are almost wiped out, like nearly all other inhabitants. I look upon this matter as one of the National Trust's obligations to the public, and the sooner the subject is brought to their notice the better, before it is too late. I should like to see my letter published in Country Life, or such parts of it as you considerable desirable, with the object of enlisting the sympathy and support of the nature-loving public. Anyhow, I trust you will use your best endeavours to bring about such a desirable object.—H. R. Taylor, F.Z.S.

[We sent our correspondent's letter to the National Trust and print their reply below.—Ed.]

To the Editor.

Sir,—With reference to the letter from Mr. H. R. Taylor, F.Z.S., may I point out that it would obviously be impossible for the National Trust to make a reservation of Box Hill, or to exclude the public from a property which has been acquired for their benefit. But I would remind your correspondent that, according to the terms of the Act under which the National Trust was incorporated in 1907, that body was established "for purposes of promoting the permanent preservation for the benefit of the nation of lands and tenements (including buildings) of beauty or historic interest, and as regards lands, for the preservation (so far as practicable) of their natural aspect, features and animal and plant life."—S. H. Hamer, Secretary, The National Trust.

To the Editor.

Sir,—With reference to Mr. H. R. Taylor's letter in your issue of the 17th inst., it is quite untrue that the colony of badgers in "The Whites" is to be dug out and exterminated or even disturbed in any way. What probably gave rise to the rumour is (as I have ascertained) that permission was given by a neighbouring landowner to catch a male and female in order to export them to St. Leonards Forest with a view to forming the nucleus of a colony there. I am informed by one who was present that they were captured in the most scientific and humane manner, and we on the hill are wondering, perhaps hoping, that they will find their way back to their former haunts. It is within my knowledge that there are still plenty of badgers on "The Whites," as I bolted one last week when digging my terrier out of a rabbit hole, where he had been imprisoned for five days and five nights. I think I may say that I know the views of the members of the Management Committee pretty well, and can state without fear of contradiction that each one of them is only too anxious to preserve the wild life on the hill in every possible way.—Ralph M. Wood.

STANDING MARTINGALES.

To the Editor.

Sir,—In your very excellent Spring Number I observe that "Sabretache" makes the following statement: "It is, of course, elementary to point out that a horse in a standing martingale is exactly like a man with his hands tied behind his back. If a horse's head is tied down (and I assert that even the longest standing martingale deprives the horse of his free head) it is totally impossible for him to save himself." As this is presented to your readers as a matter of fact and not of opinion, I feel it should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. Personally I consider the standing martingale preferable to the running one, for the following reasons: When a horse is falling, he does not throw his head up, but he tucks it in (for verification, study instantaneous photographs), consequently it does not interfere with a horse's freedom when in difficulty, and it has three advantages over the running martingale. (1) It prevents the rider getting hit in the face with the horse's poll, as sometimes happens when the horse throws his head up; (2) it prevents a horse throwing his head too high in the air when approaching a fence; and (3) it gives the rider a free play with the reins on the horse's mouth. I can only say that the more I have ridden the more I have favoured the standing martingale. I quite realise that many prefer the other; but I do not think that the question, which is far from elementary, should be so summarily dismissed as "Sabretache" has done in his otherwise interesting article.—M. F. McTaggart, Lieut.-Col. (late 5th Lancers).

THE CHICKHOOD OF A GANNET.

To the Editor.

Sir,—These photographs might be interesting to readers of Country Life. They show the chickhood of a gannet. The photograph in the top left-hand corner was taken on June 15th, and shows the chick one week old and weighing 7½ oz. That in the bottom right-hand corner was taken on August 31st, when it was twelve weeks old and weighed 7lb. 2oz.—Andrew Whyte, Lighthouse Store, Oban.

THE IRONWORKS OF SUSSEX.

To the Editor.

Sir,—I send you a photograph of an old Sussex clock. It is interesting as belonging to the old iron industry of Sussex, which was once so active. It is somewhat difficult to realise that this peaceful and agricultural county was, from the fourteenth down to the seventeenth century, a hive of busy men, with its prosperous ironworks, comparable in many respects to the more modern Black Country, yet such is the case. Camden says: "Sussex is full of iron mines . . . where for the working and founding thereof, there be furnaces on every side, and a huge deal of wood is yearly burnt; to which purpose divers brooks in many places are brought to run in one channel, and sundry meadows turned into pools of water that they might be of power sufficient to drive hammer-mills, which, beating upon the iron, resound all over the places adjoining." Some two hundred and fifty years ago there existed, it is recorded, in the weald of Sussex forty-two forges or iron mills, and twenty-seven blow furnaces. The growing scarcity of wood, however, and the opening of coal mines in Wales and other parts of the country, where ore was in close proximity to them, were fatal to the continuance of the Sussex works, which gradually became fewer and fewer until the last of them, at Ashburnham, was closed in the year 1809. Cannon, firebacks (still to be seen in many a Sussex homestead), iron slabs for tombstones, etc., are but a few of the articles which were manufactured in Sussex in the bygone days. The railings which were set up around St. Paul's Cathedral in 1710 were cast in Sussex, but were sold and removed in 1874. In various parts of the county one frequently comes upon some of the old hammer-ponds, many of which to this day are doing duty for grinding corn, etc. One Huggett, a Sussex ironmaster, made, it is said, the first cast-iron cannon in England; prior to that time all English cannon were constructed of iron bars put together in tube form and bound round with strong ropes of that metal. An old Sussex couplet reads:

"Master Huggett and his son John,
Between them cast the first Cannon."

A LONDON NEED.

To the Editor.

Sir,—The City Corporation, the London hospitals, the livery companies, the Government offices, the municipal borough halls, and the many scientific, literary and other institutions and clubs of the metropolis possess, in the aggregate, thousands of portraits of notable men and women, of which no inclusive catalogue or list is in existence. All workers in every branch of historical or literary research have felt the need of such a compilation, and I am given to understand that the authorities of the National Portrait Gallery at Trafalgar Square would welcome an effort on the part of the bodies referred to, and the owners of private galleries, to place the necessary information in their hands, from which an inclusive reference list might be made up of portraits in the metropolis.—J. Landfear Lucas.

AN AMATEUR AND DOMESTIC ELECTRICITY.

To the Editor.

Sir,—A propos of your article on this subject on March 17th, I am sending you a photograph of an electric-light engine made here (at Iwerne Minster) by the son of my head chauffeur. By means of this home-made plant he has successfully lighted his father's house. I do not know whether the photograph is worthy of reproduction in Country Life. It certainly does show great ability on the part of this boy.—James Ismay.

THE MANGO TREE TRICK.

To the Editor.

Sir,—A great deal has been written about the mango tree trick; still, as this is a personal experience, I set down what a house-party, including myself, witnessed. One day, a man clad in rags, with long unkempt hair, stood at the gate. On enquiry he informed us that he was a "wonder maker" and could make magic for us. We gave him permission to do his best. The man sat under a shady tree, and we watched from the veranda. He started by pulling out of his mouth an endless stream of coloured string, then produced from the same source large and small balls. He proceeded to show us a dried mango stone, and asked for a garden implement to dig a hole with, and also a watering-can of water. Having been supplied with the articles, he dug a small hole in the ground and placed the mango stone in it, smoothing the earth carefully over, after which he produced a small openwork chicken protector made of split bamboos, such as is used by Indian servants for drying clothes on, and guarding chickens, and also by busy mothers for babies of a roving disposition. This contraption he placed over the newly planted stone, and covered it over with a dirty cloth. Then he kept our attention on other matters for the space of a few minutes, when he peeped under the cloth, saying: "Wah, wah, your honour's land is fertile, the plant is growing"; and he poured a libation of water over the spot. A few minutes after he looked again, and the bulletin was "It grows apace," and he indicated the size of the tree with his hands. We were growing impatient. Suddenly he turned to us and cried: "Look, look," and whipped off the chicken protector, cloth and all, and we beheld a fresh young mango tree 3ft. high, with fruit on it. We stormed him with questions, but he answered nothing, merely salaamed and proceeded to show us a marvellous display of flying balls painted in gay colours. The balls seemed to come from everywhere, and we caught ourselves ducking our heads to escape being hit. He led us after him till he was exhausted; then we followed him back a few yards to the original place of performance. We were surprised to find the tree was gone and no one had noticed the way of its going. I questioned the crowd of servants with their families surrounding us, but they were as ignorant as we on the subject. As the tree was growing in our grounds we considered we were entitled to it, but the conjuror replied: "Huzzoor, the mango tree is no more; I have not got it." The hole he had dug was very much in evidence.—Nina Gough.

THE WOOD-HEAP.

To the Editor.

Sir,—The war has brought many changes to English country life. Among other things, it may be said to have evolved almost a new type of country home. In these small houses, busier but no less happy than of old, thousands of elderly gentlemen and ladies tackle cheerily for themselves work which in their younger days was done for them by a multitude of servants. Weeding gardens, feeding hens, filling coal-buckets, even cleaning boots and knives, make up the daily work of the men of the "new poor." Perhaps among the new duties nothing is more satisfactory or health-giving than the cutting of firewood. The small householder may not have any timber on his own restricted estate, but a wealthier friend or neighbour may have presented him with a fallen tree, or he may purchase rough wood from some neighbouring sawmill or forest. He is then supplied with clean, congenial and useful labour to last him through the winter. I think if the old gentleman in reduced circumstances could be interviewed on the subject he would tell you that he got most pleasure from the work done at the wood-heap. His tools are simple. A "cuddy" or stand on which to place his logs; a cross-cut saw of a size that a man can use single-handed, a good sharp axe, and a handy wheelbarrow. The wood is delivered to him in rough lengths as split by the woodman. From the heap he selects a 10ft. log. There is pride in calling to aid the remnants of his athletic strength in hoisting it single-handed to its place on the stand; carefully he measures his 12in. cuts, and "rip" goes the lazy saw through seasoned ash or dry Scots fir. Round him the leaves of autumn drift and glitter; the dews of the winter morning still hang upon the withered Michaelmas daisies and golden rod in the herbaceous border at his elbow. Busily he saws till he has a formidable heap of short logs lying beside him; then he takes them one by one and splits them into two or four upon the block, heaves them into his barrow and drives them to the stack, where they are neatly piled in rows ready for the house fires. Skill comes with practice, and before many weeks have passed it is an education to the unskilled to watch the ease with which he swings the heavy logs into place, sails through them with the saw, divides them dexterously with the axe, and stacks them like an expert.—Will H. Ogilvie.

ARRIVAL OF SUMMER BIRDS IN THE NORTH OF ENGLAND.

To the Editor.

Sir,—The first ring ouzels were seen on the Cumberland and Westmorland fells on March 13th, this being the first record for England this year. Wheatears were seen on the Lancashire coast on March 17th. The first record this year was on the 16th from Wiltshire, and two records come from different localities in Hants on the 17th, when they were first seen in Lancashire. White wagtails were seen at Sandside, Westmorland, on March 21st, this being the first record for Britain this year.—H. W. Robinson.

A FLOWER-SELLER OF JAPAN.

To the Editor.

Sir,—This is a flower vendor in Japan. The woman of this kind walks round the streets of Kyoto City, carrying the flowers on her head and crying all the time, "Come buy, Come buy!"—K. Sakamoto.

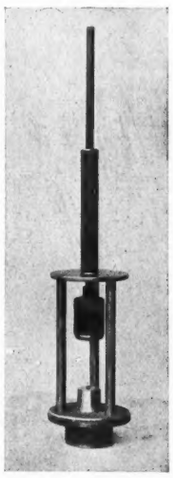
SHOOTING NOTES

By Max Baker.

HIGH CLASS POWDER AND LOW CLASS SHOT.

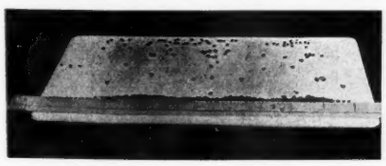
WHILE the tendency will always be to regard with suspended confidence the operations of a combine such as that which has taken over the supply of sporting ammunition, fairness compels us to recognise that all their manifest policy bears a favourable interpretation. For instance, where formerly the ordinary sporting cartridge, as obtainable from casual retailers, contained a powder nameless and of unknown quality and antecedents, to-day the twin champions—E.C. and Smokeless Diamond—are loaded into the most popular brands, with good old Schultze still available as an alternative. But with all due respect and diffidence I would suggest to the several worthy experts who supervise the technical specification, that they are spoiling the whole ship for the sake of much less than a halfpenn'oth of decent shot. Personally, I don't believe that they realise the importance of safeguarding quality in the item which, after all, is what does the trick. Some sportsmen are of opinion that cartridges do not kill like they used to; most of them blame the combine, and there leave it, having no sufficient knowledge to analyse further, even into their own deficiencies. My attempted solution is more exact. I know the powder is as good as former issues, the wadding as effective, the accuracy of loading higher, if possible, than ever in the past. Cases I am more dubious about, for I view with uncertainty the almost general abandonment by sportsmen of the higher qualities of construction; but, as this mainly affects ejection, the difference arising can hardly be introduced into a discussion of effectiveness at the other end. So we come down to the shot. Mere eye inspection of a removed charge shows a sad conglomeration of sizes, varied deformity of shape—by all seeming a decidedly suspicious condition of affairs—in saying which I must be allowed to add that Nobel's only make a minute proportion of the shot contained in their ammunition.



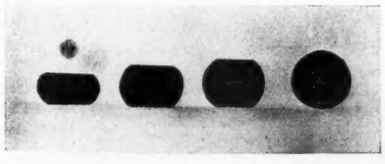
THE APPARATUS AS PREVIOUSLY ILLUSTRATED.

PRESENT DEFECTS AND PAST EXCELLENCE.

Some months ago I drew from a gunmaker a sample of cartridges specially loaded by the manufacturer for testing gun patterns on the plate. The contained shot charges were as absolutely perfect as careful sorting and rejection of deformities could make them, and still the barrel bored to give 55 per cent. patterns scored only 43 per cent., and the full choke, which should have given 70 per cent., only reached 59 per cent.; the true cylinder alone had behaved according to standard. The fault, as I locate it, resides in the quality or composition of the metal of which the shot is made. About a year ago I made a little drop-weight tester with which, in the interval, I have examined all the samples of shot that came my way, and before me are the results of nearly a hundred samples. Fully twenty years ago Messrs. Walkers, Parker sent me a full range of their sizes, and these I take as the basis of old-time quality. I choose a nice round pellet, measure its diameter, then place it on the anvil platform and allow the weight to fall upon it. The shape to which it is crushed is here shown on a greatly enlarged scale, the thickness across the flats being the amount to which it is reduced, the difference—in other words, the decrement due to the blow—being taken as a percentage of the original diameter. What do I find? Walkers, Parker shot pellets of twenty years ago sustained the following decrements: 31, 33, 32½ and 30 per cent., average, say, 32 per cent. This, be it understood, was never described as "chilled," neither was it "soft"; its trade description was "Patent." What do we find in to-day's samples, not necessarily of any particular maker? Well, here are some results, all of No. 6 size: 44, 43, 36, 38, 39, 42, 48, 41, 41, 44, 42, 40, average, say, 40 per cent. of crushability against 32 of twenty years ago.



WHEN THE PELLETS ARE GENTLY EASED DOWN AN INCLINE OF 1-IN-7 THE OBLATE SPHEROIDS REMAIN BEHIND.



NO. 6 SHOT UNDER THE FALLING WEIGHT TEST.

WHY NOT GOOD SHOT?

The change is not post-war; it had set in some years previously. In effect it shows that we have abandoned the "Patent" quality of shot of some twenty years ago and have reverted to "Soft." The Americans, who know something about testing the behaviour of their guns, use invariably a quality of shot which exhibits but 30 per cent. compression under the test. As showing that the difference in effectiveness is no myth I can quote the experience of the firm of Churchill which made a trial importation of the American material and were smothered with orders on the strength of the fame gained by the cartridges so loaded. On occasions they would receive letters from other gunmakers imploring the sale of a few bags on behalf of a "very particular customer" who insisted on tests preliminary to accepting delivery. Compare this with the case of two other firms who, I know full well, go to enormous trouble and expense to procure the best materials and make them up in first class manner. The pathetic side of their effort is the fact that all the contained shot which I have been able to examine varies around the 40 per cent. standard of softness. There is plenty of time between now and next shooting season to set the matter right. Since the foregoing was written there has come into my hands a recent sample of "plating" cartridges, the contained shot in which gave the following compressions: 32, 32, 36, 30 and 31 per cent., so proving that the making of good shot is not a lost art. Since, obviously, it would be futile to test guns with a quality of cartridge differing from the kind in ordinary use, we may assume that the standard here laid down will in due course be reflected in commercial supplies.

A JOB FOR BROOKES' SOAP.

As always, I am amazed when visiting Public School rifle ranges at the lack of sound information concerning the care of miniature rifles, and, for that matter, of .303's as well. Confining attention to the former, I find that bore condition varies between the billowy, rippled, ring-bulged, lead-coated and deeply eroded surface of the veteran weapon, which has possibly fired its hundred thousand rounds, and the recently re-barrelled sample which is hastening towards decay for want of knowledgeable attention. Seldom or never is there any ground for complaint on the score of the care taken, the evil residing solely in the lack of guidance from above. One practically new rifle in which I pointed out a remarkable series of waves (such as those which form on a newly adopted 'bus route having soft foundations) had been pronounced perfect the day before by an "Inspector." Most schools clean from the muzzle, so sweeping the dirt towards the chamber and failing to utilise the bell mouth of the last named as a means of ensuring a tight-fitting patch. Few have a proper holding vice available, or, having it, utilise the same. All use an official neutral type of Rangoon oil, innocent of the chemicals which promote penetrating and acid-neutralising properties. Few have proper size patches for the work. Practically all use flimsy and stupid rods incapable of standing up to the push which implies the tight fit necessary for cleaning. The retired soldier in charge is the best type of sergeant-major, but has never broken loose from the shackles which forbid those in charge of drill and musketry to trespass on the domain of the armourer. A very little assistance, guidance and organisation from above would not only vastly improve matters, but considerably raise the standard of shooting and greatly ease the cost—upon whomsoever it falls—of this department of army stores. The immediate and most striking inability is to focus the eye on the portion of the rifling just forward of the chamber.

THE PREMIER CLAY BIRD CLUB.

I understand that the Middlesex Gun Club has decided to move its quarters from the old site next the lake at Hendon to Perivale, the new ground being the former headquarters of the now defunct Gun Club, where live pigeon shooting prevailed up to the time of the prohibitory Act of Parliament. There can be little doubt that the gradual cramping of the old site by building and other activities in the vicinity necessitated the change. At the new venue there is a fine sky background, an opulent pavilion and sundry other qualities of excellence whose effect will be to endow the club with a mighty access of strength. Under the auspices of the British Trapshooters' Association this sport or pastime is showing a vigour and virility which suggest in unmistakable manner that off-season sport with the gun possesses its definite public, for the most part hard-working business men whose love of shooting is only partially satisfied in the department of fur and feather.

DOMESTIC ELECTRICITY.—II

FOR a good many years now the problem of cooking by electricity has been solved quite satisfactorily, so far as has concerned its technical side, and now that current for such purposes can be obtained at cheap rates it may be said to have been solved completely.

The advantages of using electricity for cooking, so far as concerns cleanness and absence of all dirt and smell as compared with ordinary fireplaces or with gas cookers, are sufficiently obvious. But, in addition to these matters, other advantages connected with the special function of cooking can also be claimed for the use of electricity.

There is, in the first instance, the increased certainty of results. The temperature (due to heating of the air in the oven by electric "elements") can be kept absolutely constant at the desired value for any length of time. Thermometers show what the temperature is, and the same operations can be repeated day after day at the same temperature and for the same period so as to give identically the same result. With a coal-heated oven this is, of course, impossible, and even with the more certain gas stove much experience and skill on the part of the cook are required to ensure a uniformity of results of which any tyro can make certain with electricity.

This certainty of obtaining uniform results applies equally to all classes of work done in cooking—roasting or baking, making bread or cakes, or toasting. By the construction of the cooker there is a uniform distribution of heat in all parts of the oven so that one part or one side of the meat or the cake does not get overdone while other parts are under-treated. There is no necessity for opening the oven to look at the roast or to turn the cake round to prevent burning. The operation—once the cook has determined the wished-for reading of the thermometer and the desired time which it should last—is simply left to itself until the time is ended.

With its remarkable advantage in certainty, therefore, cooking by the use of electricity becomes a very much more easy matter—as well as a much cleaner and pleasanter matter—than ordinary cooking, a point which may well appeal to housewives to-day under the present conditions of domestic service.

In addition to the cleanliness connected with electric cooking—perhaps largely in consequence of it—there is the much greater comfort—and, one would suppose, also healthiness—for those who are working all day in the kitchen. There is none of the heat which always accompanies the working of a gas stove, nor any of the unpleasant closeness and smell (even when only slight) which are so often connected with its use in spite of all recent improvements. The kitchen is cool, so far as cooking is concerned, even in summer. In winter a request for a radiator to warm the kitchen is not unknown.

From the point of view of economy there is no doubt that electrical cooking possesses a notable advantage. According to "Mrs. Beeton," the unavoidable wastage of a joint cooked by coal fire or gas amounts to a quarter or a third of its weight. Considerable experience with meat cooked in an electric oven shows that the wastage is approximately only about half as much. In other words, the cost of a given joint as served up to table is somewhere about 10 per cent. less, or from 1d. to 1½d. per lb. less than the cost of the same joint cooked by coal or gas.

The one kitchen operation for which electric appliances are not yet entirely suitable is the heating of water in such quantities as are necessary to make hot baths available at short notice. During the last few years a good deal of progress has been made in this direction, but it must fairly be stated that as yet they are only partially successful, except at a cost in current which would be very high. So much advance has been made in other directions that electricians are sanguine that before long they will be able successfully and economically to deal also with this problem. The writer, who for many years has used electricity as the sole means of heating and cooking in his house in London, uses a small gas-fired cylinder with a thermostatic burner in the kitchen for the supply of hot water for baths.

Electrical cookers are made in even more varied forms and dimensions than radiators. There is a "Breakfast Cooker," which will boil a kettle, heat milk, cook eggs and bacon or fish, and make toast, for a couple of people, with a consumption of about 1,200 watts for less than half-an-hour, that is, say, half of a unit.

Onwards from this little affair are domestic cookers of all sizes, up to the huge ovens which are used for canteens at works or at such places as Messrs. Debenham and Freebody's or Selfridge's, which deal with 100 to 200 dinners at once.

(I have before me the detailed records of a workmen's electric canteen. In sixteen weeks 2,562 breakfasts were served, and 2,613 dinners; 814 meals were "hotted up," and hot water provided for some 35 teas per day. The total number of units used was 3,206, which is an average of just over half a unit per meal.)

An ordinary domestic cooker comprises an oven, grill, two boiling plates and provision for warming plates. A cooker of this type, such as would be necessary for a household of ten persons, uses about 2,500 watts (2.5 units per hour) for the oven alone, or about double as much for the time when oven, hot plates, grill, etc., are all being used at once at full current. The cooker is, of course, fitted with a number of switches by which any section can be used separately, and the current for the oven can be varied widely according to the work to be done. In general it is found that a cooker is used up to about 60 per cent. of its full capacity as a maximum.

In any place where there is a public supply of electrical current the electrical companies or departments can always give all sorts of detailed information as to cost of electrical supply and apparatus. In many cases they have established show rooms of appliances in connection with the domestic use of electricity, and have even employed a skilled lady cook who has become an enthusiastic demonstrator of the advantages and blessings of the methods which she has under her charge! Under these conditions it is, of course, easy to obtain information as to everything connected with the use of electricity for domestic purposes. For country houses where no public supply may be obtainable it is no doubt safest that technical advice should be obtained from an expert engineer who can give an impartial opinion as to the apparatus most suitable in each instance. Nearly all the types of apparatus mentioned are made by quite a number of manufacturers, and each type has advantages or specialities of its own which its makers set forth in their circulars with at least sufficient emphasis.

SEWAGE PURIFICATION

The Plumbing at your Country House may be modern, but have you satisfied yourself regarding final treatment of the sewage? Some better provision than the insanitary cesspool is called for as an insurance against ill health. "Safety First" is wisely applied against poisoning by septic liquids discharged to country ditches.

Apart from the menace to health, cesspools are prohibitive in cost when you consider pumping and cartage charges.

The effluent from our schemes is comparable to rainwater, free from smell, and incapable of causing a nuisance.

Sir Frederick Fison, Bart., writes: "The sewage plant which you put down at Boarzell, 10 years ago, has worked excellently."

Other letters:
". . . . your system is practically automatic and requires very little attention indeed, which in these difficult days of labour is a great advantage."
"The installation has been working quite well, and is very satisfactory."

Fifth Announcement: relating to the special advantages of our Realisation Sale

The offer of 20% discount for cash only will continue during January, as at first announced.

This concession, influenced by formal considerations already explained, will be withdrawn on January 31st, for its purpose will have been served.

Our establishment is one of very few of its grade in the country. This passing opportunity of purchasing fine gems, and examples of the best modern craftsmanship in setting, is extremely unusual.

The announcements of sale conditions, supported by our reputation of ninety years, have resulted in an immense volume of business from clients already upon our books, and from others who understand the nature of our offer.

We are pleased to think, and we believe we are right in so doing, that the wholesome habit of a past generation is being revived and extended. We refer to the practice, at one time more general, of investing a margin of income in gems and jewellery for personal use, or silver for household use. The practice has a deeper significance than might be suspected. In addition to the pride of possession of fine jewels and silver plate, it should be remembered in the changes and chances of the world that property of this order forms almost the only investment of secure, permanent and indestructible value, being, indeed, an international currency, which can at any time and in any place be translated into terms of cash.

These observations only apply, of course, to jewels and plate of intrinsic value, not to mere mass-production jewellery.

The exclusive nature of the £250,000 worth of stock offered under sale conditions, 20% for cash only, means that, while a large proportion of this stock has been sold during the past two months, a plenitude of choice remains for understanding purchasers of precious stones, goldsmith's work, the finest modern silver, with collectors' pieces of old English silver and Sheffield plate.

Immediate enquiries are invited, and appointments will gladly be made with those who are interested in this form of investment, under the expert advice which we have been privileged to give for so many years past.

MONTE CARLO

One of the quaint figures in last year's Carnival, which was one of the principal events of the season.

One of the competitors in the motor-boat races just before passing the judges. Note the Casino in the background.

MONTE CARLO is the premier health and pleasure resort of rank and fashion. It offers every attraction made possible by the generous endowment of nature and the ingenuity of man. The scenery is superb, the winter climate warm and sunny, yet mildly bracing, the golf links and tennis courts famous for their excellence and the players they attract to take part in the many tournaments. The beautiful surrounding country offers endless walking and driving opportunities, yachting and sea bathing can be enjoyed in safety and abundance, while for those who are tired or run down the Thermal and Zander Institutes provide every kind of bracing, soothing and curative baths, massage and general treatment.

There is no other town on the Côte d'Azur which enjoys such a steady maximum of sunshine.

This illustration gives an excellent impression of the unsurpassed beauty of the Casino Gardens.

THE world - famous Casino is open all the year round. The grand opera season extends from January 1st to April 15th; Russian, classical and modern ballets and first-class concerts—classical, modern and symphony—are regularly arranged. There are many superb dancing floors—notably that of the ballroom at the Casino, and the dance teas and suppers at the Café de Paris, where some of the best exhibition dancing on the Continent is to be seen, are affairs of international popularity. Amongst the events of the Monte Carlo season are the Horse Show, the Dog Show, the Flower Show, the races, a sports carnival, motor-boat racing and Women's Olympic games. The hotel accommodation is unequalled. The "train de luxe" CALAIS-MEDITERRANEAN EXPRESS runs daily from Victoria, and is composed on leaving Calais, of entirely new rolling-stock containing single and double berthed sleeping compartments only.

One of the most important events of the season is the Regatta, which this year bids fair to beat all previous records in the matter of entries.

THE ESTATE MARKET

REALISATIONS IN 1922

"FIGURES," it has often been said, "can be made to prove anything." Without endorsing the statement, we may say that the available data as to real estate transactions in 1922 show that the year's sales fell short of those in 1921, but not to any serious extent. Indeed, seeing that 1921 felt the benefit of the exceptional activity following the close of the war, we may regard the year that has just closed as satisfactory in many respects.

One section of the market, that for farms, suffered in sympathy with the extremely difficult conditions of the agricultural industry, and it is surprising that sales of farms contributed as much as they did to the estimated aggregate realisations. Even in the City Mart, which is, perhaps, not the centre where special success might be anticipated in offering farms, there were, during the year, eager throngs of farmers at certain auctions, and, but for the spirited manner in which they bid and bought, more that one auction of a large landed estate would have been a blank day.

Sales at the Mart amounted to £2,616,052, and at the other City centre, Winchester House, to £425,720, together £3,041,772, or nearly £12,000 above the total in 1921. Other sales by auction notified to the Estate Exchange amounted to £3,322,396, a decrease of about £56,000 on the figures for the previous year; and the transactions by private treaty, £4,972,535, fall short by £378,000 of the sum reported in 1921. The figures just given have, obviously, no claim to represent the volume of business, for the aggregate of 10½ millions sterling is five or six millions less than the amount of the sales of which definite prices realised have been made known, and many of them published in COUNTRY LIFE, in the course of the year. However, the figures are worth giving, inasmuch as they are compiled from the same sources year by year, and therefore afford a fairly stable basis of comparison. They do not purport to be exhaustive, and no figures could, for there is a vast quantity of all descriptions of real estate that changes hands without any publicity.

We are receiving reports by individual firms as to their experience in the year, and they agree, in the main, that prices have tended towards a lower level than in the two years or so following the war. The pressure of taxation and the enfeebled state of trade during the year were not calculated to lead to any great competition for the more important properties, yet there has been considerable business done, both in the auction room and privately; and if all the larger houses that have changed hands are not destined to be any longer residential, but are to be converted to institutional and kindred purposes, that consideration need not diminish satisfaction that they have found purchasers, often at very good prices.

EXPERIENCES OF FIRMS.

"OUR sales will exceed those of the previous year by a figure closely approaching one million pounds sterling," is an opening remark in Messrs. Hampton and Sons' summary of business in 1922. Of course, much of their total is made up of such sales as those in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden, and other purely urban investments. But they report "steadily increasing returns of sales of purely residential estates, for occupation, including transactions notable in that the properties entail a heavy cost for maintenance, showing that really choice places of this character find buyers in spite of the continued high taxation. Farms, especially stock and dairying, find a ready sale, and for the best land prices of last year are being maintained, with an increased demand for sporting estates.

"The demand for purely residential properties in every part of the country has been distinctly good, and the number of transactions recorded in this class of property is well above he average. The activity of the public during he trying months of 1922, in regard to places entailing no heavy responsibilities of staffing and upkeep, may well encourage us to think that the coming year under new conditions will be exceedingly prosperous.

"Where owners are reasonable in their prices, business can be done without much difficulty; but, unfortunately, many owners hold out unwisely for prices for which there is no justification beyond the pleasant memories of certain 'boom' years. At no time was the question of price a more important factor than it is to-day. It is not a question of quoting anything so low as pre-war figures, but of realising that extravagant prices, or prices based on cost, are grave obstacles to a sale.

"Round London the market has been exceedingly active, and certain districts have been very popular. There is scarcely a medium-sized place available at Oxted. Again, the Reigate and Redhill district has certainly retained its public, but Purley has shown, of all the outer suburbs, the greatest number of transactions. Dealings with some of the finer Wimbledon abodes have caused much comment among even the most experienced authorities on values.

"Outstanding features of 1922 have been the keen demand for unfurnished flats and houses of the smaller and medium sized type, and the paucity of enquiries for furnished houses and the large type of town mansion. Flats of all descriptions have been sought, irrespective of rental, but premiums have tended to a more normal level. The demand for really fine suites, with 8 to 10 bedrooms, is greater than ever. Flats in St. James's, Mayfair and Westminster are never many weeks in the market unless the terms are prohibitive. More houses have been offered for letting unfurnished on lease, and substantial premiums have been readily obtainable, especially for the direct lease of the smaller houses. The low-built, non-basement and 'period' house invariably finds a ready market; sales have been numerous and prices, generally speaking, satisfactory, Campden Hill and Hampstead being most sought after: in the latter district we have sold a large number of the better-class houses, and prices realised, if below that of the 'boom' years, are extremely satisfactory."

Notwithstanding the depression in agriculture, there has been, according to the annual review issued by Messrs. James Styles and Whitlock, a steady absorption of farms at what may be considered fair prices. They say that "Large arable farms have been practically unsaleable and only a low price can be obtained for such. There is a very keen enquiry for farms to rent.

"The demand for good residential farms in sporting districts, particularly those with houses worthy of improvement, has again been a feature, and we find a number of people of good standing, who in the old days would have occupied the mansions and manors, are turning to such farms as a pleasing and economical existence under difficult circumstances in regard to taxation and general high cost of living. No doubt the fact that occupation of a farm gives good sporting facilities at a moderate cost is a great influence in such cases.

"Residential properties of moderate size in good districts have continued to sell readily, although there has been some fall from the high records of 1919 and 1920. Mansions and large houses, possessing no particular character and without modern conveniences, have been almost unsaleable."

FOR THE PRESENT-DAY PEPYS.

THE "Business, Sporting and Official Diary," compiled by Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley, though only now in its second year, has taken its place as one of the things to look for at this season and to use all the year round. It is elegantly bound in green leather and of convenient size—small enough for the pocket, but not small enough to be mixed up with things and lost. The printed matter embodies Governmental, Royal and Diplomatic lists, information as to stamp duties, postage, Law and University and other dates, the close seasons for fishing, the shooting seasons, race meetings, shows and similar fixtures, and a list of golf courses, the last named giving also the nearest station and hotel. There is a useful list of hotels with garages. Whether many people now write up a diary in the old-fashioned style is doubtful, but the glossy surface and amplitude of the dated pages should tempt some to emulate Pepys; and the binding of this diary is good enough to preserve the contents for future generations, should anyone aim at writing for them.

The magnificently furnished villa at Cap Ferrat belonging to the late Sir Ernest Cassel is to be sold by Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley at Hanover Square next month. Les Cedres, formerly the residence of King Leopold of Belgium, was enlarged and improved by Sir Ernest Cassel. It occupies a wonderful position on Cap Ferrat in 42 acres of gardens and grounds with a lake.

Mr. Malcolm Low is about to dispose of Clatto, between St. Andrews and Cupar, and he has instructed Messrs. Knight, Frank and Rutley to offer it by auction at an early date. The estate extends to 338 acres, including Clatto House. The golf courses at St. Andrews are 4½ miles off.

HOUSES AT HOVE.

TWO Hove houses of the first class are to come under the hammer early in the New Year, and one is at present filled with a remarkably fine collection of furniture, being the freehold, No. 2, Grand Avenue, which was the property of the late Mr. Frederick T. Shoolbred. Splendid carved oak and other suites, with a variety of kingwood and satinwood and other valuable items, Persian rugs, rare carpets, china, glass, clocks, bronzes, pictures, porcelain and books, are to be catalogued by Messrs. Wm. Willett, Limited, who will begin the sale of them, immediately after submitting the freehold, on January 23rd. It is a house of eighteen bedrooms, four bathrooms with sea-water supply, and a suite of lofty and imposing reception-rooms, right on the sea front. The other house is No. 9, Third Avenue, Hove, which will be sold, on January 31st, with immediate possession, by Messrs. Maple and Co., Limited.

A good deal of antique character is included in the furniture sale at Flishinghurst, Cranbrook, which will take place next week, January 10th and 11th—oak dressers and similar items. That auction is entrusted to Messrs. Rowland Stuart (1921), Limited.

CANFORD MANOR'S NEW NAME.

LADY REID, referring to a sale reported in COUNTRY LIFE of December 23rd, asks whether it is too late to suggest to the governing body of the new school which is to be opened—in the mansion lately sold by Messrs. John D. Wood and Co. on behalf of Viscount Wimborne—that Canford Manor is a name which it might be proud to use. She points out that Wimborne, two miles away, is proud of possessing a fifteenth century school of Royal endowment, "and, I am assured, has no mind to have its name appropriated by a new foundation."

TENURE OF COUNTRY COTTAGES.

THE ownership of at least 5,000,000 acres of land is represented by the Central Landowners' Association and the Land Agents' Society, the latter body being composed of men who are also responsible for the management of over 10,000,000 acres. These two bodies jointly deposited with the Committee on Rent Restrictions a memorandum on the subject of the desirability or otherwise of continuing the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act. They urge very strongly the claims of rural property to special and distinctive treatment, and a drastic revision of the present enactments as to the recovery of possession.

The ownership of most rural cottages, and certainly all those let at or under 3s. a week in 1914—rents that have become the "standard" rents—means not only that, under present conditions, they produce no net rent at all, but that considerable loss, even greater than that suffered before 1914, usually results to the landowner. The existing enactments as to the recovery of possession put a premium on obstructive and unreasonable tactics by persons who hold cottages that are needed for the use of estate and farm hands. It is pointed out, too, that many country cottages continue to be held by persons, such as police constables, railway porters and others, not working on the land, and that they retain possession against the wish of the landowner and farmer, who want accommodation for landworkers. The obligation to provide "alternative accommodation" should, it is submitted, be abolished. The recommendations of the two bodies are convincing proof of what is too often overlooked, namely, that the incidence of rent restrictions is by no means confined in its inconveniences to urban property. It closely affects also rural property, and makes additional difficulties for farmers and landowners in their efforts to farm land to advantage.

ARBITER.

EUROPEAN ARMS AND ARMOUR

WITH the fifth volume* the late Sir Guy Laking and his editor, Mr. Cripps-Day, complete a record of the panoplies of war from the Norman Conquest to the reign of Charles I, dealing minutely with every type of defence and weapon in use excepting only firearms and artillery. The volumes before us—which in all run to 2,000 pages, with 1,800 illustrations—would have been a magnificent achievement for a literary man whose whole time was spent at his desk; but when we consider that Sir Guy Laking in his short working life had, for the most part with his own hands, arranged and set up the armour at the Wallace Collection and at Windsor Castle; had originated the London Museum in Kensington Palace and supervised its removal to Lancaster House; had catalogued all these collections with the most minute care and research; had also produced magnificent schedules of the collections of furniture and china at Windsor Castle, and in addition to these works was continuously employed at Court and at Christie's, we can but stand amazed that he could have been physically capable of the writing and collecting illustrations for the work before us without considering the enormous amount of research and travel necessitated in its compilation. Every work that has been produced on the subject and every paper, even in obscure archæological papers, were laid under contribution; and if we include Laking in a great triumvirate with Meyrick and Hewitt, who deal mostly with the documentary history of arms and armour, we have in this collection of reference books all of importance that has been written, or indeed is likely to be written, on the subject.

We have criticised the splitting up of the work into periods rather than into subjects in a former review, and on reaching the last volume we still feel that the criticism is justified, for there can be no sharp dividing line between, say, a helmet of 1590 and one of 1610, and under the present arrangement the student must perforce continually be turning from one volume to another to trace the evolution of a particular type. Still, we must bear in mind that there are two distinct schools of archæology and museum arrangement: the one as practised in the British and other Museums according to periods, and the other as defended by the late General Pitt-Rivers, according to subject. Both have their firm supporters, and both, if studied with an open mind, have their distinct values.

The fifth volume begins at the seventeenth century, that period when the decadence of armour and much other craft work had set in. The King, the noble and the rich man had in former times to hold their own with the sword, and were therefore insistent on the supply of practical defences and efficacious weapons, limiting their decoration to those parts only where the efficiency would not be impaired. With the advent of the seventeenth century, however, extended travel and exploration had brought the treasures of the East into Western civilisation, and an increase of individual wealth, security of tenure and personal ostentation had produced an orgy of unnecessary ornament which passed as decoration, but which, in most cases, was merely the advertisement of the acrobatic skill of a craftsman working on entirely wrong lines. It will, therefore, be conceivable that as the man who can engrave a poem on a cherry-stone is not the craftsman to employ for carving an inscription on a monumental arch, so the armourer who found that an output of richly engraved armour was more profitable would in time lose his old craft skill and be unable to think in terms of proportion and practicability. As an instance we may quote the armour of Louis XIV by Garbagnus (Fig. 1455) and that of Charles I (Fig. 1448), both of which, though covered with minute engraving, and in the latter case with gilding, have no redeeming feature in design or practical construction. As a comparison we may instance Seusenhofer's armour, made for Henry VIII in the Tower (Fig. 1016), which is similarly covered with engraving, but is noticeable only for the superlative excellence of its design and construction.

The chapter on forgeries should give the collector, especially the collector of moderate means, food for serious thought, his only compensation being that the real experts are so few that his highly prized imitations will probably escape notice, even in a sale. At the same time, the unsparing criticism of the shameless forgeries acquired by our national collections in the dark ages is all to the advantage of the student who will honestly read, mark and learn.

The last chapter, which we understand is entirely the work of the editor, Mr. Cripps-Day, will be, perhaps, the most interesting to readers of COUNTRY LIFE, for it schedules all, or nearly all, the examples of arms and armour in the churches and buildings other than galleries or private collections in England.

This is a most useful record for the antiquary, and is especially valuable as reminding the incumbents of parishes that they are but trustees for these remnants of history. How many of these helmets and other accoutrements have been lost, stolen or given away will never be known, but we take leave to mention the facts that early in the nineteenth century the then Dean of Hereford gave to Sir Samuel Meyrick the magnificent Pembridge Helm that had hung in the cathedral since the death of its owner in 1375; that the lion "gadling" from the Black Prince's gauntlet (Fig. 561), from the title under the illustration, appears to be in private hands; and that in comparatively recent years an attempt was made to sell the helm from Framlingham Church.

We cannot conclude without noticing the careful and unassuming rôle which the editor, Mr. Cripps-Day, has played in what must have been a most arduous and exacting task of weaving the threads left by his friend into the splendid fabric we have before us. In addition to the chapter on Church Armour, Mr. Cripps-Day has compiled a bibliography of thirty pages which will be of untold value to students and librarians. The publishers, Messrs. Bell, have added to their now lengthy list of works on art and craftsmanship, produced, obviously, in no commercial spirit, but with the real and honest object of adding to our store of exact knowledge and research. And so we take farewell of Guy Laking, enthusiastic worker, loyal servant of the Crown, and generous, lovable friend. His personality will be unknown to those who come after us, but his work will endure as long as there are students of history, art and craftsmanship. F.

* European Arms and Armour, Vol. V. by Sir Guy Laking, Bart. (Bell.)

Illustrated History of Furniture. by Frederick Litchfield. Seventh edition. (Truslove and Hanson, 36s. net.)

MR. LITCHFIELD'S name is widely known as that of a prolific writer on antiquarian subjects, and the popularity of his Illustrated History of Furniture, first published thirty years ago, has been so well maintained that it is now in its seventh edition. As an introduction to the literature of the subject the book possesses a permanent value: it takes account of the "historical and social changes which have influenced the manners and customs and directly or indirectly affected the furniture of different nations" and thus provides a foundation for subsequent research. Exigencies of space forbid a detailed discussion of single specimens, but Mr. Litchfield possesses a clear eye for essentials and his gift of lucid exposition enables the reader to grasp the dominant characteristics of successive styles.

Although the work has been carefully revised and brought up to date, in the sections devoted to English furniture a number of statements are open to criticism. Mr. Litchfield accepts the popular story that the chair in the Sacristy of York Minster was used for the coronation of Edward IV, but there can be no reasonable doubt that it represents a mid-sixteenth century revival of the X pattern, and when Sir Antonio More painted Mary Tudor he represented her as sitting in just such a chair. We are also sceptical as to the date which Mr. Litchfield assigns to a settee and upholstered chair from Holyrood Palace, for although they are embroidered with monogram of Charles I and Henrietta Maria, if the evidence of style is a reliable guide it is very improbable that they were made until some years after the Restoration, such a re-use of old material being in no way exceptional. In these two instances there appears to be a tendency to antedate, but in the case of spiral turning it is certain that the author fixes its introduction too late. He writes that it "became known and fashionable in England under Charles II," but it is found on Cromwellian chairs and was not first adopted on walnut furniture. Mr. Litchfield has added many new illustrations, and the Appendix contains a carefully compiled list of artists and cabinet-makers, with some useful information on technical processes. R. E.

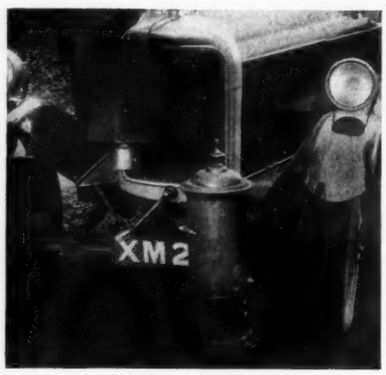
COUNTERING JACK FROST

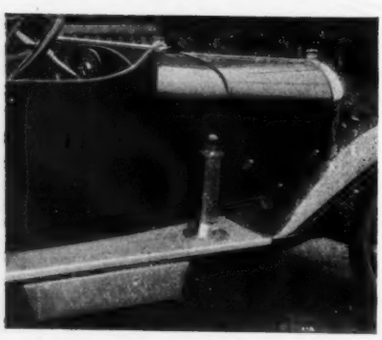
WE are now at that time of year when another anxiety is laid on to the shoulders of the motorist. Unless the garage is substantially built of brick or stone, or similar material, or it is adequately heated, there is the very serious danger of damage by frost. It has been calculated and scientifically demonstrated that seven degrees of frost are necessary before water in a closed vessel in a closed unheated building is likely to be frozen; but discretion is better than a heavy bill for repairs, and few car owners will take the risk of the thermometer staying above —6° C. during any given winter night.

It is sometimes urged that the safest of all remedies against cracked cylinder jackets or burst radiators is to empty the water out, but actually this "remedy" is by no means infallible. There are many cars of which the cooling system is so designed that when the water is "emptied" by the opening of the waste tap some of it may remain, and a little water can do quite as much damage as a full quantity. Unless the owner of the car has satisfied himself that the drain tap really does empty both radiator and cylinder block, he must guard against being lulled into a false sense of security by the belief that he has successfully countered an attack by Jack Frost. Especially is the snare of an ineffective drain tap to be guarded against when there is only one such tap, situated somewhere near the base of the radiator. The pipe connecting the radiator and base of cylinder block frequently enters the latter unit at an appreciable distance above the base of the water space, so that there is a ledge behind which water may remain, and a cylinder block, supposed to be empty, may actually be nothing of the sort. Every cylinder block ought to have a water tap in it in addition to the one at the base of the radiator, and incidentally the proper working of the radiator tap may easily be impaired by the formation of an air lock, a contingency that is overcome by the use of a cylinder block tap.

There are distinct drawbacks to the practice of emptying water out of a radiator. Although most of us know perfectly well that it is the right thing to do, very few of us take the trouble to get distilled water, or at least filtered rain-water with which to fill and replenish our radiators. We take the water from the tap and never consider what sort of water it is. Every time a radiator is completely refilled and to a less extent every time it is replenished with ordinary "company's water," material for fresh furring deposit is added. In other words, radiators should not be refilled more than is necessary. Once they have been filled, as at the factory, when the car is sent out on its road test the deposit material in the water is extracted and left on the interior of the radiator and the water space of the cylinders. Once this deposit has been extracted the remaining water is innocuous, obviously, and no more deposit can come from it. Therefore, when this water is emptied out of the radiator and fresh is added, there is left the deposit from the old water, while the necessary material for additional deposit is provided. To some extent this evil can be met by the use of some of the special preparations that are available for the prevention of furring. Some years ago we tried tablets known as "Boilerine" with considerable success, finding that not only did they prevent the formation of deposit, but they also tended to remove any that was already present. The ideal treatment of undistilled water for a radiator is to add a few "Boilerine" tablets according to the directions when the radiator is first filled, or if this is impossible, as soon as delivery is taken of the car and then to exercise care in the selection of the water that is added subsequently; or when such selection is impossible, to add a tablet or two of "Boilerine" whenever the radiator is replenished.



The Buckingham radiator lamp turned away from the radiator to show its gauze front, and the Notron slow combustion stove.



The Harley heat retaining system, as fitted to a small car. The cylinder at the forward end of the running board is the air pump, by means of which water is extracted from the radiator. Underneath the running board may be seen the tank in which the water is stored until the car is again required for use, when it is returned to the radiator by means of the pump, the two-way tap of which is operated by the milled wheel seen on its base.

"ANTI-FREEZING" MIXTURES.

The heating of the garage by means of hot-water pipes or a similar arrangement is a matter not for the automobile designer, but for the plumber or builder. There are, however, several methods of protecting the engine and radiator against frost, without emptying them of their water and without incurring the expense of an elaborate garage-heating system. First of all, there is the use of anti-freezing mixtures in the water, which perhaps is the least satisfactory method of all, but ought to be mentioned if only by way of warning. Alcohol added to the water certainly prevents it from freezing, but if the car be run with the alcohol in the radiator the whole of the spirit very soon disappears by evaporation, and so the owner is in a fool's paradise if he thinks that the alcohol he added to his radiator one day will be there the next night if his car has been used in the meantime. Alcohol, to be effective, must be added to the radiator every night —when very possibly there will be no room for it. Glycerine is another anti-freezing agent quite as effective as alcohol and free from the risk of evaporation as soon as the engine has become warmed up. But glycerine acts adversely on the rubber connections between engine and radiator and in time causes them to perish. There are other materials and special preparations that may be used in a similar way, but all of them have some sort of "snag."

SAFETY LAMPS.

The use of a lamp constructed on similar lines to the miner's safety lamp under the bonnet of a car is quite satisfactory so long as the frost is not very severe, but some of these lamps do not give out enough heat to keep the water in a liquid state through, say, twelve hours of really hard freezing outside. A modification of this idea is seen in the Buckingham Radiator Heater, which consists of a specially constructed lamp which hangs, not under the bonnet, but over the front of the radiator. We have used one of these lamps for some time and found it satisfactory, except that when turned up high so as to give a generous amount of heat, it was inclined to smoke and deposit soot on the radiator, which to some extent, if not very materially, must have impaired its efficiency.

A radiator muff, by Messrs. Brookes of Birmingham, a very useful fitting when it is required to leave a car standing for a short period, and also for reducing cooling when the car is travelling.

Electric heaters to go under the bonnet are generally excellent, but commonly expensive in maintenance if not in first cost. When an electric main is available at the garage these heaters may be recommended quite safely, but when the batteries

An Expert Opinion of the New 20 h.p. Car

"A POSITIVELY electrical acceleration . . . the new car simply streams away from the mark. On top, the engine picks up from a standstill as does that of no other luxury car.

"What I saw of its performance suggested that it yields its magnificent performance at no greater fuel-cost than is entailed in running plenty of cars of considerably less power."

"The Evening News" - - - December 5th, 1922

of a car are relied upon for their current, they should be used with extreme discretion. It must be remembered that at the time of the year when an electric heater will be necessary the batteries of a car are generally working under their highest strain—i.e., starting the engine in the morning is harder work than in the summer-time, at night-time the lamps are used more than when the motorist is enjoying the benefits of daylight saving, and therefore any additional work for the batteries to do should be regarded with the keenest of suspicion.

One of the safest, simplest and most satisfactory ways to guard the car while it is in the garage is by means of a slow combustion stove, some of which are designed especially for garage heating, are cheap to buy, economical to maintain and thoroughly efficient. We have for some time been using one known as the "Notron," made and sold by Messrs. Tom Norton, Limited, of Llandrindod Wells. It burns special fuel, and a stove costing 2 guineas will, we have found, keep a garage 16ft. by 10ft. quite comfortably warm at an approximate cost of 6d. a day. Naturally, the amount of heat that it gives is dependent on the amount of fuel that is put in, and we have found that if the stove be placed fairly near the radiator, say at a distance of 1yd., it is quite efficient against all ordinary frosts when supplied with about threepennyworth of fuel a day. Generally, of course, the stove will not be left burning all day, but only when the car is in the garage, which to one who is making daily use of his vehicle will mean that the stove is used at night-time only. It is, therefore, a fairly safe estimate to say that for twopence a night one may sleep in peace, with nor haunting fears of the probable ravages of Jack Frost.

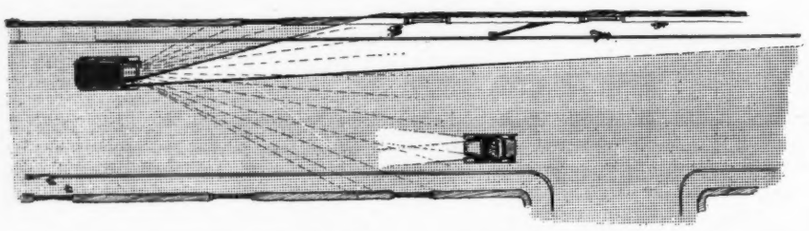
Another and an entirely new system is that known as the Radiator "Winter" Heat Retainer, invented by Mr. Geo. Harley of 2, London Road, Camberley. This system consists, not in the application of any external heat, but in the retention of heat that is already in the radiator water. On the running board of the car is mounted a pump and under the running board is a heat-retaining tank—i.e., a tank constructed something after the lines of the vacuum flask. Actually there is no vacuum or even attempt at it, the inner vessel (of brass) containing the water being surrounded and packed by cork insets in the outer tank (of aluminium), and we mention the "vacuum flask" merely by way of illustration. The tank is connected by a suitable pipe to the radiator and operation of the pump withdraws the water from the radiator into the tank, where it retains its heat. When it is again required to run the car, the water is pumped from the tank back to the radiator, and as it is still warm, starting is considerably assisted. Either withdrawal or return of the water is effected by less than half a dozen strokes of the pump.

The system has distinct possibilities, although, of course, it is necessarily a trifle more complicated than the employment of external heat by any of the means summarised above. But it is seldom that heat applied by means of a stove is sufficient to ensure easy starting, and both lamps and stoves are always, at best, capable of going out. Mr. Harley's system has the unique advantages that it cannot fail and that once fitted—it costs £10 10s.—it is always on the car and ready for use at any time without preliminary preparation. It can be fitted quite easily to any car, it takes up no space that could otherwise be usefully occupied, and we are informed that the potential risk of damage to the connection between radiator and tank, with resultant leaks, is overcome by the design of the connecting pipe and its joint. Finally, it has undergone and has satisfied the real test of prolonged service on a car.

Lighting Legislation.

RUMOUR has it that the recently suggested limitation of the power of motorists' head-lights to an illumination of 50yds. is to be imposed by law. We have already said that any such regulation will be a clumsy but none the less effective method of converting our roads at night time into a shambles. One might go further and say that the serious use of private cars at night—that is their use for long distance business journeys, which is a use to which they are now extensively put—might as well be definitely prohibited by law. If the idea did not seem impossible, one might think that this suggested legislation emanated from vested interests anxious to check the development of private and independent road transport. Night travelling with head-lights that give no more than 50yds. illumination is unthinkable!

On the detail or technical objections to the proposed legislation, little emphasis seems to be necessary. Who is to decide what constitutes 50yds. illumination? What check is there to be on the over-zealous policeman, hard up for a "job," who considers that a motorist's head-lamps give more than 50yds. illumination and promptly issues a summons? In the past, where merely technical offences have been committed, magistrates have on occasion inspected the offending vehicle outside the court, as, for instance, when it has been a question of silencing, but one cannot imagine that law courts will extend the time of their sittings into the night, so that a motorist's head-lamps may be examined and tested under actual working conditions by the magistrates. By the use of some such standard device as the Royal Automobile Club testing disc, it may be possible to decide under ideal test conditions how much and how lengthy an illumination a lamp gives, but one cannot readily picture policemen posted on the roadside fully equipped with these testing discs, and still less can one picture the intelligent use of the discs by the average policeman!



A diagramatic illustration of the useful illumination obtainable from a spot light without any penalty of dazzle of approaching drivers. If the car fitted with a spot light had its head lights on their beams would dazzle the driver of the meeting car. As it is, if the head lamps are extinguished, a spot light enables the driver to proceed at a good speed and in perfect safety and no one is dazzled. It is suggested that anyone entering the main road from the left-hand side—i.e., opposite to the side turning that is shown—would be very badly dazzled by the spot light, but this may be regarded as a quite minor point.

Some sort of legal control for head-lamp dazzle may be advisable, and if it is, we cannot see the difficulty in or objection to the compulsory use of dipping head-lights.

Another alternative is the use of searchlights, positioned so that they may be moved by the driver, which at present are illegal—in theory, at least. We have recently fitted a Stewart Spotlight to a car and have found it an invaluable fitting. It gives an extremely powerful light, the direct beam of which would certainly exercise a powerful dazzling effect, but when any vehicle is met on the road the lamp may be turned either horizontally or vertically, so that its direct beam does not meet the on-coming driver. The power of its beam is such that, when deflected across the path of the car on to the left-hand side of the road, it gives a very useful driving light and cannot dazzle any other traffic, as the drivers of any vehicles on that side of the road have, of course, their backs to the searchlight.

The Spirit of Motoring.

ALL those who have the pleasure of personal acquaintance with the inimitable Mr. John Prioleau are frequently intrigued by the question of his age. That of the ordinary individual does not interest us a little bit, but as soon as one meets Prioleau one is thrown up against a problem willy nilly, and one finds oneself a member of a highly speculative circle. In his "Adventures of Imshi" (published by Messrs. Jarrolds at 21s. net) Mr. Prioleau tells us his age, but it would be unfair to give away his secret to those who have not read his book. Suffice it to say that the book is the very embodiment of the spirit of this man-boy, which is also the spirit, not necessarily but accidentally of the motorist. Sometimes the reader will imagine that the volume is the work of a brilliant youth of eighteen, at others he will regard it as embodying the sober and mature experience of a man of fifty.

Mr. Prioleau tells you in his book all about the roads, the countries and the people between the Channel and the Sahara. Sometimes he is a motorist with no thought of anything but his car, at other times he is a very entertaining educationist, but always he is a very human man. Whether you think of following in his entrancing footsteps across France, Morocco and Tunis to the gates of the Sahara and back across Spain, or whether you wish merely for entertainment at home, his book is one that no one who can appreciate good reading can afford to miss.

If you would like to know what it feels like to pay an afternoon call on a gentleman of the palæolithic age, you may get a very good idea from Mr. Prioleau's Chapter IV, where "one is abashed before the accumulated mass of Time; yet, within a minute, with characteristic tourist impudence, one is prying into the home life of the poor man as if one were looking over his cave with an order to view from the local house agent." His remarks are prompted by a visit to Stone Age relics at the Rochers Rouges, where Mr. Prioleau says, "this man and his family more than a thousand centuries old probably need repose, as there is every evidence that they walked to their resting place from Africa."

His remarks are more practical, but none the less poetical, when he tells you about the really indefinable charm of the beautiful Riviera as contrasted with the delightful modern towns which, charming as they are, are not the real Riviera. "That magic land lies a few miles back from the sea, lifted 1,000ft. or so on to the knees of the Alps."

His comments on Algeria are practical as well as inviting. The climate is not so hot as it is often supposed to be, and as soon as he had left Morocco he wore more and thicker clothes than he had ever worn in England in winter. "Do not expect the Riviera with its comforts. You will find infinitely finer scenery and enough of it to keep you busy driving for a couple of months without going to the same places twice. That is, I think, better than 'Palace' hotels. Also, you will find excellent garages everywhere."

Turning to methods of planning a foreign tour, he tells us that he once took part in a motor wine tour in France where his maps gave him a succession of pleasant drinks connected by roads. As he says, "all this is the worst of trying to write about motoring. At every paragraph you are held up and diverted from your course by a dish, a village, a wine, a mountain, a vintage, a river or a roadside play which insist upon having the whole of your attention. There is nothing on the glowing roads of the world which does not matter. The eager thrusting life of every people is shown to you in its every aspect on the roads. In a day's run you may pass through two lands as different in character as Connaught and Kent. Yet it is all the great glad world, and the road binds it all into one."

Sometimes Mr. Prioleau's grammar is a trifle surprising, and he is very fond of a thing that is different from something else; but what does it matter! In some 350 pages we have offered to us a fascinating record of a remarkable journey and a very impressive materialisation of the spirit of a true motorist.

"Twenty-five Years of British Motoring."

IN our issue of December 16th, 1922, there appeared under the above heading, a brief review of the history of the British motoring movement, prompted by the twenty-fifth anniversary of the R.A.C. Unfortunately, the Star Engineering Company, Limited, of Wolverhampton, was omitted from those firms who were commercially manufacturing motor cars before 1900 and who are still manufacturing them to-day. Mr. Joseph Lisle, the managing director of the Star Engineering Company, Limited, points out that his Company was manufacturing and selling cars in 1898, that in the same year they were fitting pneumatic tyres and also wire wheels, which have recently been re-introduced as a modern development, and that a Star was one of the few cars to participate successfully in the 1,000 miles trial of 1900, also wheels were supplied by the firm to the general "trade" in 1898 and 1899. We take the opportunity of congratulating the Star Engineering Company, Limited, of Wolverhampton, on a long and creditable record.

British International Trophy.

THE rules for the British International Trophy for motor boats will remain unaltered for 1923, and the Royal Motor Yacht Club will be glad to supply full particulars to prospective challengers in this country.

It will be recalled that suggestions were made some months ago for a limit of cylinder capacity in order to reduce the cost of the boats, and the matter has been very fully discussed with the Motor Boat Club of America. A communication from the latter body has now been received to the effect that, owing to the large number of restricted classes existing, it is desirable to retain the unique character of the British International Trophy race in its present form, and this being the view of the holders of the trophy, the Royal Motor Yacht Club seems unable to proceed further with the suggestions received for an alteration.

ITEM.

A New Daimler Booklet.—"The Story of the Daimler Sleeve Valve Engine" is the title of a booklet recently published by the Coventry firm dealing with the history of the sleeve valve engine in its early days. The greater part of the booklet is devoted to an account of how the Daimler engine won the Dewar Trophy in 1909 by its performance under what is described as the greatest engine test on record. Desiring to demonstrate the capacity of the new engine, the Daimler Company asked the R.A.C. to formulate the necessary conditions for the test, which should be of such a nature that, to pass with success, an engine would have to be almost perfect in design and construction. The conditions of the test were as follows, and the details of the performance of the engine under each heading are given in this new booklet: 1. That the engine shall be tested on the bench for a period of 132 hours' continuous running. 2. That the horse-power given off shall at no time during the test fall below the R.A.C. rating multiplied by 1.3; the piston speed to be 1,000ft. per minute. If a higher piston speed is used, the minimum horse-power shall be increased proportionately. 3. That the water temperature of the inlet shall be kept at 50° Centigrade during the test. 4. That upon completion of the bench test, the engine, without any of its vital parts being disturbed, shall be installed in a standard touring car and run for a distance of 2,000 miles on Brooklands Track, this distance to be completed in not more than sixty hours of running time. 5. That upon completion of the track test, the engine shall be again placed on the bench and run for five hours under the same conditions as the previous bench test referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2. All were satisfied excellently by the engine that thus proved its worth.

FROCKS FOR NEW YEAR FESTIVITIES

BOUFFANT EFFECTS IN EVENING FROCKS.

THERE is going to be a lot more cut and making in dress than has been the case of late, and, simple in appearance as is the prevailing expression of the fuller evening gown, a close study of its composition reveals undreamed-of intricacies. Probably accounted among the most attractive are the models fashioned of shot tissue—silver and old blue, gold and rose, pale green and silver and so on; while the feature of the best skirts is the decided downward curve taken either side. An even hem is regarded as ordinary and commonplace, and the fulness at the top is graduated with such nicety that a casual glance scarcely suffices to bring the realisation that the greater part is collected over the hips.

A popular and pretty break to the long plain expanse of one material frequently seen is a deep line of finely pleated chiffon, inset just below the bend of the hips, the chiffon picking up the colour in the tissue. Then there is the accompanying perfectly straight sheath-fitting corsage, carried to a long normal waist-line. This is essentially a bodice that exacts skill alike in the fashioning and fitting, since without the aid of seams or bones, or any old-time contraptions, it must set without crease or wrinkle.

The ensemble of that severe upper part and the bouffant jupe is most unquestionably attractive, added to which it is so refreshingly different.

We have, however, gone a step further with the original design illustrated. A week or so back there was mentioned a threatened revival of the 1885 back bustle; and that is now likewise materialising. Just as an example of how long it takes a new mode or revival to be recognised, I personally know of a gown made after this manner a year ago. It was a lovely little creation of sea green faille, the skirt bunched up at the back into a great bouffant bow, and mounted on to a close-fitting pointed bodice cut out at the top in a wide square. The owner, it may be mentioned, lacked the courage to wear it last season, but is doing so this, with signal success.

Our picture, however, awaits description. The grape design of the brocade suggests some artistic blend of dull purple and dull red and perhaps a soupcon of green mingled with gold, the ends to the bustle bows being completed with metal fringe, the chiffon draperies, depending from either shoulder and caught to the wrists, emphasising the purple or red; or, if preferred, the two colours could again be blended in the transparency. It would be an illuminative experience to see the impression made by this gown in a large assemblage of statuesque draperies and ordinary little crinoline dresses. Given the right wearer, with that delightful un-self-consciousness—the only pose capable of carrying off a novelty with the correct air and confident decision—I am prepared to predict for it a succès fou.

Another weariness in connection with dress that is beginning to be commented on are the pale mushroom-coloured stockings. Now, this at one time almost unobtainable shade of hosiery has descended into the cheaper qualities, or something so nearly approximating as to make no matter, one is inclined to cry out "Hold, enough!" At present, however, as it seems inconceivable we shall ever return to dark hosiery, save for specialised occasions, it is perhaps rather futile to make this plaint without some suggested remedy; and at the moment the latter is lacking, though, short of wearing white, it is impossible for a paler shade to be adopted; and grey, which is the sole alternative, clashes badly with the many brown-hued garments in vogue.

A propos of silk stockings generally, experience is proving the wisdom of selecting those with lisle feet for walking, not only because the latter wear better, but they are more comfortable to the feet. And stockings, together with gloves, represent two of the soundest sale purchases, more particularly when the really reliable specialist is requisitioned. There are some big drops in prices at several famed establishments, and the wise administrator of a dress allowance invariably spends any superfluous cash handy in such necessities, in preference to frittering it away on remnant baskets and shop-soiled garments.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

AN appeal reaches us, over the signatures of, among others, the Marchioness of Carisbrook and Earl Beatty, for the Winter Distress League, the object of which is to afford an opening for the expression of practical sympathy with the many men and women unable to obtain work. Anyone willing to help by forming working parties, collecting money, clothes or boots, or arranging entertainments, will be welcomed by the Hon. Secretary, 34, Great Cumberland Place, London, W.1.

MR. LIONEL EDWARDS' DRAWINGS AS CERAMIC DECORATIONS.

Readers of COUNTRY LIFE have been familiar for a long time with Mr. Lionel Edwards' exquisite water colours of hunting scenes. Beautiful from a decorative point of view, they are delightful to the sportsman for the absolute fidelity to horse and hound which are their distinguishing features. Messrs. Soane and Smith, Limited, of 462, Oxford Street, W., have just placed on the market hunting breakfast, tea and dinner services, the decorations of which are entirely from new and original drawings of hunting subjects by Mr. Edwards. Three years of considerable thought and labour have been expended on their production. It may be added that the potter has done his part in producing beautifully simple and graceful shapes in the famous "Copeland-Spode" ware. The original drawings and specimens of the services are now on view at Messrs. Soane and Smith's shop. A really beautiful catalogue is now issued.

"FULL CRY" AS DECORATION ON A MEAT PLATE.

WELL KNOWN TO CONNOISSEURS.

It is a very interesting point à propos of Messrs. John Hall and Co.'s fine shop in King Street, Manchester, that its connection is not, as might be supposed, principally with the inhabitants of that city, but rather with the more serious and interested purchaser of gems, silverware and goldsmith's work, wherever he may live in Great Britain and Ireland. Messrs. John Hall and Co. are acknowledged experts in such matters, and in the ninety years of the firm's activities its transactions have linked its history with many of the most distinguished names in the kingdom. The connoisseur of such goods is the first to realise the necessity of the careful selection of gems, plate or goldware if objects purchased are to give lasting joy to the possessor or provide a safe investment for money, always realisable at any time and in any place. It is among the cognoscenti that Messrs. Hall's customers are to be found.

A BROADSHEET OF BARGAINS.

Messrs. Waring and Gillow have issued their usual Broadsheet of Bargains in connection with their Sale, which begins on January 1st and lasts for three weeks. Reductions of 25 per cent. in many cases and in some of 50 per cent. are offered.

HOME MADE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Electric lighting plants have been brought to such a pitch of perfection and such a state of efficiency and easy working that it is not to be wondered at if some people already on the main supply cable are installing their own plant, because in some cases to possess one's own lighting set works out so much more cheaply. The Armstrong-Whitworth belt-driven semi-automatic set is among the very best. Two or three points in its favour may be enumerated. Its makers are well known, its running costs are low, it has no unnecessary complications, its manufacturers give excellent service in regard to looking after it when installed, and the highest opinions of its efficiency are expressed on every side. All information required will be courteously supplied by Messrs. Sir W. G. Armstrong-Whitworth and Co., 9, Great George Street, Westminster.

Furnishing the House

By R. RANDAL PHILLIPS and ELLEN WOOLRICH

Editors of "Our Homes and Gardens."

With nearly 150 illustrations, from fine photographs.
Quarto. Price 10s. 6d. (postage 1/- extra).

THIS book brings under review the furnishing of all the rooms of the house, from basement to attic. It offers practical advice as to what are considered to be the most satisfactory treatments and gives a wealth of examples of rooms actually carried out — so much more convincing than drawings of projected schemes.

The book shows how, in the furnishing of the house, comfort and convenience can be combined with the character that belongs to good furniture of the past and of the present. It is essentially practical in character, and most helpful for the many suggestions contained in its pages.

An illustrated prospectus will be sent post free on application to the Publisher, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. 2.

English Homes

PERIOD 3.

Late Tudor and Early Stuart (155 -1649).

By H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

Nearly 500 superb illustrations and plans 63/- net.; by post 2/- extra.

THIS volume illustrates the third period of our Domestic Architecture which includes the reign of Elizabeth and the first two Stuarts. In many respects this is the most beautiful and informative volume in this great work on our Historic Homes which will, when complete, so systematically and fully set forth and illustrate the entire history of English Domestic Architecture and Home Life that it will, most assuredly, form a primary and essential item in every library of reference, great or small, public or private, worthily taking its place beside such great national works as Murray's Dictionary of the English Language, and the Dictionary of National Biography.

A special illustrated prospectus of this work will be sent, post free, on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C.2.

Quality without Extravagance

HOWEVER quaint, however orthodox the scheme of decoration, the new range of Hoskins Twin Beds completes the picture. A delight to the eye and an invitation to real healthy repose—comfortable and without a suggestion of rattle or creak, these beds are built to last a lifetime. Produced in seamless steel in a range of never-before-attempted designs, they are beautifully finished in a variety of colours by the special "Egshel" method which gives a surface hard to chip and easy to clean; also as oak, walnut or mahogany. For the small room, flat or bungalow, nothing could be better in taste or more dainty in design; and the price—absolutely inexpensive. Such beds only cost £3 to £5 5s. each.

For every reader of "COUNTRY LIFE" there is a copy of "For a Good Night," "Hoskins Gift to the World," and beautiful booklets describing Hoskins "Silver Spring" and "Silent Night" mattresses, good bedding, etc. May we post you copies? If your furnisher cannot show you Hoskins sleep equipment write to us. We will see that it is shown to you. See the Hoskins name and tag on every bed you buy.

The magnificent Club House at Mont Agel Golf Course. Refreshments are supplied at reasonable charges.

MONTE CARLO is the premier health and pleasure resort of rank and fashion. It offers every attraction made possible by the generous endowment of nature and the ingenuity of man. The scenery is superb, the winter climate warm and sunny, yet mildly bracing, the golf links and tennis courts famous for their excellence and the players they attract to take part in the many tournaments. The beautiful surrounding country offers endless walking and driving opportunities, yachting and sea bathing can be enjoyed in safety and abundance, while for those who are tired or run down the Thermal and Zander Institutes provide every kind of bracing, soothing and curative baths, massage and general treatment.

There is no other town on the Côte d'Azur which enjoys such a steady maximum of sunshine.

A typical morning scene at the Café de Paris. It is difficult to associate Christmas with this photograph.

THE world - famous Casino is open all the year round. The grand opera season extends from January 1st to April 15th; Russian, classical and modern ballets and first-class concerts—classical, modern and symphony—are regularly arranged. There are many superb dancing floors—notably that of the ballroom at the Casino, and the dance teas and suppers at the Café de Paris, where some of the best exhibition dancing on the Continent is to be seen, are affairs of international popularity. Amongst the events of the Monte Carlo season are the Horse Show, the Dog Show, the Flower Show, the races, a sports carnival, motor-boat racing and Women's Olympic games. The hotel accommodation is unequalled. The "train de luxe" CALAIS-MEDITERRANEAN EXPRESS runs daily from Victoria, and is composed, on leaving Calais, of entirely new rolling-stock containing single and double berthed sleeping compartments only.

The entrance to the Casino, showing the Café de Paris in the foreground and the Hotel de Paris on the extreme right of the picture.

The Hotel de Paris is within a stone's throw of the Casino, the Gardens and the Sea.

It's many smiles nicer

I count happiness in smiles

because if you're happy and don't smile . . . well, you're simply enjoying yourself . . . and that's selfish.

But if you smile a lot somebody else is bound to smile and be happy.

I like Mackintosh's most because it seems to bring most smiles. Everybody likes it . . . even Grandpa, and he's most times like the BIG bear.

I suppose it's because Mackintosh's is so good. Mother says you can't be really happy unless you're good. And I suppose eating good things simply must make you good.

Mr. T. A. Henstock, of Carmarthen, using a B.S.A. Shot Gun, 2½in. Chamber, has recently broken 60 clay birds in succession. The following are extracts from his letter:

"About publishing my score at the Match, when I broke 60 clays in succession, I have not the least objection. The Cup I won was the 'Novice' Cup. Until a little over two months ago I had never seen a clay bird, so it came as a great surprise to the other competitors. We are not allowed to use other than 2½in. cartridges. The above Match was at Pwlltrap, St. Clears, October 14th."

HIGH PRICES FOR OLD SILVER

There was a good crowd at my Sale on Thursday, Jan. 4. Keen buyers were jammed together as tightly as in an Underground lift during the rush hours. Silver reached top prices again—a Georgian teapot and cream jug weighing 21¼oz. realised £127 17s. 6d., or over £6 per oz.; a pair of Georgian mugs (17½ozs. at 36/-) 30 guineas. For three solid hours the crush of eager buyers continued and managed to create a further record. Ten old Sheffield salt cellars reached £18 10s. Diamonds, pearls, etc., went equally well.

The kettles shown were sold by me at a recent sale. No. 1, a fine example of Paul Lamerie's work, realised £1,160, while No. 2, by Seth Lofthouse, fetched £400 seven days later.

The teapot and cream jug referred to were collected on our most recent motor tour in Scotland, having been delivered at Piccadilly since Christmas. As a matter of fact the car and contents only arrived home on Christmas Eve. I am constantly being told what a tremendous boon it is to have two experts call and give their judgment for so nominal a fee as 21/-. Write and ask them to call when in your vicinity. Next week's tour embraces Coventry, Derby, Bradford, Halifax, Manchester, Preston, Southport, Liverpool, Chester, Stoke, Stafford and Birmingham. The following week—Wokingham, Reading, Swindon, Gloucester, Cheltenham, Worcester, Craven Arms, Shrewsbury, Welshpool, Hereford, Neath, Port Talbot, Penarth, Weston, Clevedon, Bath. Third week—East Coast. As I have said, for a guinea they will call and point out your treasures, and tell you their probable cash values. I am always in attendance at Calder House. Valuations for all purposes at reasonable fees. Silver, Jewels, Tapestries, Pictures, Postage Stamps, Engravings, Fiddles, Porcelain, Objects of Art—all secure excellent prices at my sales, which are held every week, thus preventing the tiresome delays which occur where sales are only held at infrequent intervals.

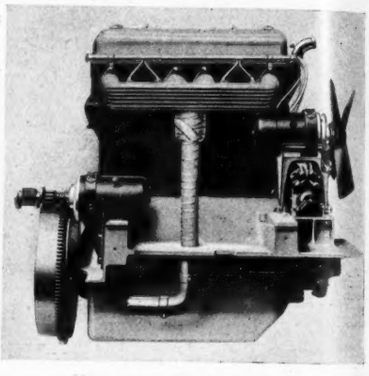
THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

THE 16 H.P. SUNBEAM

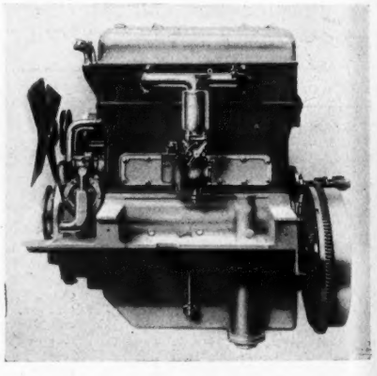
IN the happy days of early 1914 one of our most popular medium powered cars was the 16–20 h.p. Sunbeam. During the years immediately succeeding its attainment of this enviable position the 16–20 h.p. Sunbeam was engaged in very different work from that of transporting law abiding members of the peaceful community on pleasure and business bent. On all fronts of the war the 16 h.p. Sunbeam car was extensively employed for the joy-riding and other journeys of "brass hats," and all who were in the fortunate position of being able to choose their means of transport. It may not be out of place to mention casually that the cars so employed were not actually manufactured by the Sunbeam Motor Car Co., Limited, of Wolverhampton, for the omnipotent word of the War Office decreed that the cars designed and originally produced by the Sunbeam people of Wolverhampton should "for the duration" be manufactured by another firm in Coventry, the Wolverhampton works being devoted almost exclusively to the manufacture of aero engines. And so it comes about that there are still floating on the stormy seas of the secondhand car market a number of what may be called hybrid Sunbeam cars. They are cars with an excellent pedigree, although they may be described as illegitimate offspring and both their "parents"—i.e., the parent responsible for their design and the parent responsible for their actual production—now, very naturally, disclaim any responsibility for their behaviour. This is by the way, but I mention it chiefly as a warning to any indiscreet buyer who may be tempted by the very low price at which these cars are now available and may consider that he is buying a genuine Sunbeam car with the whole of the Sunbeam resources behind it.

That old 16 h.p. Sunbeam is described in the catalogue as a 16–20 h.p. car. Its modern representative is described as a 16–40 h.p., the reason being due to its present possession of an engine entirely redesigned; largely, it may be presumed, in the light of the aero engine experience of its designer and maker. The new 16 h.p. Sunbeam has four cylinders that measure 80mm. by 150mm. bore and stroke, which give it an R.A.C. rating of 15.9 h.p., but the overhead valves, disposed vertically along the centre line of the cylinder head, aluminium pistons and many other "tricks of the trade" of searching after and obtaining high efficiency, give the engine a brake horse power of something like 45.

The valve operation is by means of rods from a cam-shaft enclosed in the crank-case, and the whole of these rods are totally enclosed so that the exterior appearance of the engine is in no way adversely affected. There is the usual quickly detachable aluminium cover under which the valves and their operating rods are kept fully lubricated so that they work under eminently satisfactory conditions. The crank-shaft has five bearings, the pistons are of aluminium and co-operate with the high-class workmanship throughout the whole unit to secure the very satisfactory brake horse power output. Lubrication is, of course, under pressure to all the crank-shaft bearings and to the cam-shaft, the pump being driven by a skew gear from this latter shaft. Engine cooling is by pump-circulated water, assisted by a fan, the pump being driven by a cross-shaft at the forward end of the engine, and the fan being driven direct by a belt from a pulley on a forward extension of the crank-shaft, while a second belt from the fan drives the dynamo—one of the few features of the design of this unit that seems open to unfavourable criticism. A car of the Sunbeam class ought not to be saddled with a belt-driven dynamo and it is not without significance that the other two Sunbeam models, the 14 h.p. and the 24 h.p. six-cylinder, are free from this stigma. A continuation of the water pump spindle drives the magneto, which is thus positioned with its contact breaker and distributor pointing outwards—a highly commendable position in any case and one always appreciated when any attention to the magneto is necessary,



The exhaust side of the Sunbeam engine, showing how the outlet is brought down from the centre of the manifold and the positions of the electric accessories—i.e., sparking plugs, starting motor, dynamo and magneto.



The carburettor side of the 16 h.p. Sunbeam engine, showing also water pump and oil-level indicator.

although it must be admitted that the Sunbeam magneto is mounted rather low underneath the dynamo. Carburation is by a Claudel-Hobson instrument supplying its mixture to the cylinders through an external induction pipe well water jacketed and fed with fuel on the Autovac principle from a tank at the rear of the chassis. Much more that would make pleasant reading could be written about this Sunbeam power unit, did not considerations of space forbid.

There is nothing heterodox in the lay-out of the chassis which could be quite reasonably quoted and regarded as a typical example of modern British automobile practice in high-class medium powered motor cars. The leather-faced cone clutch works very much better than is usual with clutches that use this once popular and universally employed material, its notable smoothness and ease of operation being, doubtless, partially attributable to the employment of first intention springs under the leather. Through it the power is transmitted to a four speed gear-box, three point suspended in the chassis frame and giving as its ratios 13.28—1, 8.71—1, 5.9—1 and 4.1—1, the

THINGS YOU KEEP

THERE is not one of us who does not keep and cherish something old and well-loved. It is generally a coat or a pair of boots or a pipe. It is old, old beyond exact recollection, yet we lavish upon it a deep affection which we deny to the newest and finest products of Bond Street.

Why? The answer is simple. Because it has always done what we wanted; it has always fitted, always been comfortable, always comforted us when everything else went awry. It has always done its job—and that is a virtue rare beyond the rarest jewels of a Rajah's treasure. It has become a part of our lives.

That is what a MORRIS does for you. You do not buy it as an acquaintance—you buy it as a lifelong friend. Just as you instinctively know when you try them on that a coat or a pair of shoes will live with you until you have forgotten how old they are, so, when you take over your sparkling MORRIS, in this year of grace 1923, you know that she will stay with you always. Not many people or things can be relied upon always to do their job. The MORRIS can; and that is why you at once settle down comfortably to enjoy her, accepting her immediately as one of the family, knowing that she will never fail to play up.

Those are the things MORRIS Cars do—they do their job and keep on doing it; they always play up; they never let you down

Three Years of Work—Three Millions of Money

This is what it cost to build the great new refinery of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co., Ltd., at Llandarcy, Wales, where "BP" Motor Spirit is made.

No expense has been spared, no resource of chemical and industrial science has been neglected to make this refinery the most efficient in existence. It represents the newest and highest development of refining practice.

With the best possible crude oil—the product of the famous Persian field—and the best possible refinery, the refined product is bound to be also the best possible. And the "Best Possible" is "BP."

If it were possible to make a better motor spirit, Llandarcy would make it.

"BP" is the only entirely British Petrol—British in every stage from the Crude Oil well to the familiar Khaki Can.

reverse ratio being 10.2—1, and although the experience did not arise with the Sunbeam, I have on one or two occasions very much regretted that the reverse ratio on some cars was higher, or certainly not lower than the first. It is when one gets in a very awkward place, as for instance reversing on a sharp down grade, that a very low reverse ratio may be a distinctly welcome asset.

ASCENDING BOX HILL—A CLIMB THAT THE SUNBEAM ACCOMPLISHED ON TOP GEAR.

The rear axle is fully floating and has helical bevel final drive. Suspension is by semi-elliptic springs all round and the steel artillery wheels are for 820mm. by 120mm. tyres. The steering is by worm and sector with an eccentric adjustment for wear, and of the bald chassis specification it only remains to give the chief measurements, which are a wheel-base of 10ft. 4ins., a track of 4ft. 9ins., an overall length of 14ft. 3¾ins., a body space of 7ft. 5½ins., and a ground clearance of 8ins.

BODYWORK.

The car is, of course, available with different types of bodywork, the model that forms the subject of this note being that which is known as the five-seater touring. The four-seater touring is of similar external lines, but is rather smaller, as also considerably lighter, so that the car to which it is fitted may be expected to have a somewhat higher road performance. Both these cars are, of course, provided with side curtains as items of standard equipment. Then there is a limousine landaulet, which, to anyone who does not know the capabilities of the 16 h.p. Sunbeam engine, would appear a very heavy body to mount on such a chassis, and there is an all-weather model —i.e., one in which the two glass windows on either side may be sunk completely out of sight into the door or side panel of the body and the top may be folded back, giving an entirely open touring car. It seems almost unnecessary to say that the standard of finish of Sunbeam bodywork, like that of the chassis, is of a very high order. There are no unnecessary frills, but there is no suggestion of skimping in detail, nor of the employment of any material that is not of the very best. It has a very roomy body, this 16 h.p. five-seater car, and its seating is well thought out to give maximum comfort to the occupants. There is, however, lacking one item of equipment that ought to be standard on all high-class touring cars, namely a rear wind screen. The reason, of course, is not far to seek. Some owners would prefer to take advantage of the reduced cost owing to the absence of a wind screen, or to have one fitted to their own requirements after taking delivery of the car, but for myself I must say that I feel a rear wind screen is an essential on an open touring car and that it is far better that one should be standardised by the makers, with possibly the option to the customer of having a car without it at a slightly reduced cost, than it is for the car to be turned out without the fitting and for the customer to obtain it or continue to do without it as he prefers.

Although a chassis feature rather than a matter of bodywork, the driver taking his place at the wheel of a Sunbeam for the first time finds the control pedals rather differently situated from the usual, for they are considerably higher at the floor boards than they are on most cars, and there is also another detail, entirely a matter of chassis design, which one really notices for the first time on taking the wheel. This is, that the hand brake is set inside the gear lever, both, of course, being at the right hand of the driver. If memory serves me rightly, I had a word to say on this subject when describing a Sunbeam several years ago. It is one of those little departures from convention that, comparatively unimportant one way or the other, seems difficult of justification from the point of view of anyone who is frequently driving different cars.

ON THE ROAD.

It has already been said that the brake horse power of the Sunbeam engine is in the neighbourhood of 45. It, therefore, seems almost superfluous to say anything in detail about the capacity and suitability of this engine for dealing with its load. One expects any Sunbeam car to have a good performance and one expects it still more when one knows that this very satisfactory figure of 45 b.h.p. is obtained from a car that the R.A.C. rates at 15.9 h.p. Even so, one is considerably surprised at the capabilities of this 16 h.p. car. Most unfortunately, very soon after we began our run, the speedometer driving belt came adrift. I say most unfortunately, but in a sense I was rather pleased, because I am always trying to convince every car designer I meet that a belt drive for the speedometer is no more defensible than is one for the dynamo; and on this occasion, as a result of the inevitable failure of the speedometer drive, I am unable to say definitely what the actual maximum speed of the Sunbeam is. Suffice it, therefore, that on that magnificent stretch of road on the top of the Hog's Back we managed to leave a 25 h.p. well esteemed American car as if it were standing still, although the driver was obviously pushing it to the utmost; that, judging as accurately and as safely as one can judge, our speed must have been something very near to 55 m.p.h. and this, at a point where the road was ascending rather than the reverse. But the charm of this Sunbeam lies not so much in its very satisfactory speed capacity, as in the way in which it gives of that capacity. The engine runs as smoothly and as silently under load as anyone could desire and it compares very favourably with several sixes that have passed through my hands. This comparison with a six cylinder unit applies equally well to the Sunbeam engine from the point of view of its flexibility and its acceleration for, considering the size and weight of the bodywork and complete car, the liveliness of this model is really something quite out of the ordinary. I did not make an actually timed acceleration test, but I feel fairly safe in asserting that the Sunbeam would put up a performance that would compare very satisfactorily with that of any car on the road irrespective of the number of engine cylinders, but with due allowance for the nominal power rating.

At somewhere just before the maximum speed of the car was attained, there was a slight vibration period which, however, was not of sufficient consequence to deserve serious consideration. I mention it merely in order to secure an absolutely faithful record of performance.

But in spite of its very aristocratic manners and in spite of its six-cylinder quality, the most extraordinary feature of this new Sunbeam remains yet to be chronicled. This is its hill-climbing capacity. There is a certain hill not thirty miles from London and known to all Londoners and to all readers of COUNTRY LIFE, by name Box Hill. The road from near the Burford Bridge Hotel to the top is at no point extremely steep, but it is a very useful climb for any motor car to make, because its various corners, and the second in particular, are of a deservedly notorious severity. I must give credit where credit is due, and I hardly know whether the greater share for a climb made by this Sunbeam, with four passengers on board, on top gear from bottom to top rests with the car or with its extremely skilful driver, Stevens. I have been up Box Hill on many cars with drivers of whom some declared that they had frequently accomplished the climb on top gear, but Stevens was the first man and the Sunbeam was the first car to have achieved this distinction with me on board. It is impossible to take the second corner at high speed and any car that will get away after its drop down to something like walking pace on top gear is a very good car indeed—such a one is the 16 h.p. Sunbeam.

The riding qualities of the car are fully up to the exacting standards set by the engine. Steering is light and easy, although not to an exceptional degree and will probably be improved when the Sunbeam has fallen into line with the modern fashion of what a few years ago would have been regarded as an extremely large steering wheel. The present steering wheel is 17ins. in diameter; only an inch more would make a lot of difference. The brakes are satisfactory in their efficiency without being exceptional, but the foot brake was apt to smell of burning rather readily if used vigorously for quite a short period. Its efficiency was not impaired, but perhaps a little attention to the material with which it is faced would put this matter right.

Altogether this Sunbeam is a genuine aristocrat among medium powered cars and indeed among cars of any type. In view of its paper specification its price is high, in view of its performance and general quality its price is distinctly moderate, for with motor cars as with everything else, the very best must be paid for and there is very little in the 16 h.p. Sunbeam that is not of the very best. W. H. J.

British Government Selling Rolls-Royce Aero Engines to Germany?

IT has recently been stated in the British press that "in order to evade Allied control, which restricts Germany's aeroplane output, the German aeroplane building firm known as Rofawerke will open a new factory near Copenhagen on December 1st. It is intended at first to build only seaplanes of a medium type, each machine to have two 360 h.p. Rolls-Royce engines. Afterwards, large land machines will be built with four engines."

Messrs. Rolls-Royce, Ltd., ask us to make it clear that they are not supplying engines to the Rofawerke firm, nor have they had any communication with it.

Thus it would appear that if it is a fact that this German firm are using Rolls-Royce aero engines, they must be acquiring them from the British Government. True, the engines are of an obsolete type, but it certainly seems a very extraordinary situation that the British Government should be supplying to its ex-enemy engines for the production of aeroplanes, the construction of which the British Government itself has been at considerable pains to prevent. The situation is indeed a Gilbertian one, for the British Government has no use for these obsolete engines and, consequently, it seems a mere matter of ordinary business that it should dispose of them. At the same time it seems very anomalous that the engines should be sent to a neutral country while the British Government is, presumably, aware that they are being used by a German firm.

While on the subject of Rolls-Royce, we may take the opportunity of saying that we have also been asked by this firm to give the lie direct to a rumour that the new 20 h.p. car is being manufactured either completely or in part from components obtained from the American factory of the Company. The rumour possibly owes its origin to a certain American flavour about the design of the new 20 h.p. Rolls-Royce, but very little thought is necessary to make it apparent that the policy of making the components for the British cars for the British market in America is one that a firm of Rolls-Royce standing could not possibly pursue. Incidentally we are informed that the American market for the 40-50 h.p. model is considerably bigger than the output of the American factory, with the result that arrangements are probably to be made by which the 40-50 h.p. cars are to be exported from Great Britain to the United States—a proposal which will not give the same displeasure to American purchasers that importation of American parts for the new 20 h.p. model would undoubtedly cause in this country.

Brisbane–Sydney Record.—A cablegram to Vauxhall Motors, Limited, from Mr. Boyd Edkins states that the new record which he set up with his 30–98 h.p. Vauxhall on December 12th was made against terrific odds. There was very heavy rain for several hours, and the condition of the roads became extremely trying. Mr. Edkins succeeded, however, in beating the previous record for the distance of 643 miles by 40mins., his time being 18hrs. 58mins., a remarkable performance under circumstances of the utmost difficulty.

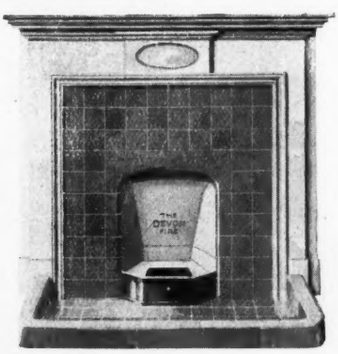
THE "DEVON" FIRE



T IS NOT NECESSARY TO BUILD A NEW HOUSE merely because you want to have Devon fires roughout your home. Scrap your present grates. It a simple matter to fit DEVON FIRES in their place.

There are SIX EXCELLENT REASONS for doing so: Economy, Appearance, Construction, Labour-Saving, Little Smoke, Easy Fitting. We cannot give a full explanation here of all six reasons. If you are interested in the other five ask your local ironmonger. He is probably a "Devon" Fire enthusiast and will tell you all about them.

Reason No. 1.—ECONOMY. The "Devon" Fire quickly pays for itself out of coal saved. This was conclusively proved in recent Government tests which showed that the "Devon," in competition with all the best modern fireplaces, consumed 25% less fuel than the average of all the others competing. This means that 15 cwt. of coal used with a "Devon" Fire will go as far as 20 cwt. used in any other fireplace. Therefore in the interests of economy alone, it pays to instal the "Devon" Fire.

SOME NEWS OF THE SALES

EACH country has its own obsessions, like its own individual noises and odours, and the outstanding obsession throughout the British Isles is the sports suit, which frequently filters in modified form to other climes, though here the sports-clad woman is practically a daily feature. One is safe to meet her, carrying a bag of golf clubs or a tennis racket, most days in the week, and the golfing fraternity have gone en masse for the knitted wool suit.

At present there is no sign of a dearth of fresh expressions where this is concerned, although the designers are as tenacious of their inspirations as the most exclusive of Parisian couturières. In colouring the marl mixtures appear the most popular, while greater facilities are afforded every day for matching up hosiery and scarves to these attractive presentments. The most recent novelty, however, is a three-piece suit, comprising skirt, coat on cardigan lines, and a fancy sleeveless waistcoat. And we are, I understand, the first privileged to show this pictorially. That the idea may be fully realised in detail our artist has depicted the suit as worn complete, suggesting beige as colouring, the cardigan held to the figure by a narrow red leather belt; the half figure displaying the coat doffed and the sleeveless waistcoat revealed, an accessory wrought in a fancy knitted pattern of red, black and beige wool, completed by a back of plain knitted beige. This in its turn is worn with a crêpe de Chine shirt in the same nuance, and red tie.

In addition to its exceedingly original and attractive appearance, this suit will quickly appeal to the knowledgeable as thoroughly practical and workmanlike, for there is no pastime, perhaps, in which the gradations of heat are more felt than is the case with golf. And the cardigan, while sufficiently warm to start playing in on a cold day, is yet such a slight thing it can be stuffed into a golf bag or carried over the arm as the game is warmed up to. The golfing woman expert is so much in the limelight these days it behoves her to make a pleasing appearance.

In pursuance of their usual custom, Messrs. Marshall and Snelgrove, Oxford Street, W., are disposing of all their surplus stock, to make way for fresh spring goods, at reductions that leave little doubt as to a speedy clearance. And since the high standard of the goods here is consistent throughout, it makes small difference whether an early or late visit is paid.

In made-up garments special attention may be drawn to smart, up-to-date ready-to-wear evening frocks, not tossed or shop-soiled in the least, that range in price from 6½ guineas: an almost incredible price for confections of good quality satins, brocade and Georgette; and for a like sum there comes a range of coats and skirts of fine quality Saxony suiting, beautifully cut, tailored and finished with braid.

Always eagerly sought at this establishment are the model coats, culled from the most exclusive sources, and consequently well up-to-date, if not in advance. These are specially well worth acquiring at their tempting sale reductions, many being trimmed with fur. Then, passing to the tea-gown section, it is to find a very wealth of seductions, such, for example, as a chic tea-frock of lovely metal brocade, only 98s. 6d. and a handsome dignified tea-gown of chiffon velvet, in a long range of colours and black, that slips over the head without any fastening and is caught in at a low waist-line with gaugings and a self-corded belt, that is selling at £5 19s. 6d. And just a final word of a clearance at half the marked prices of a large stock of rich and beautiful plain and fancy silks, brocades in gold and silver metal and printed crêpe de Chines.

The sale fever is likewise running very high about the environs of Knightsbridge, notably at Messrs. Harvey Nichols. This house has, again, a long established reputation to maintain and is far famed for a particularly fine taste in all matters pertaining to dress. Re-building and extension on a considerable scale are in progress, and this means that a great many additional articles must be cleared in order to avoid spoiling. A hint to the wise.

Ideal early spring possessions are some coats and skirts of loom-woven striped material, built on quiet, elegant lines, the loose coat belted to the figure, that represent a very real bargain at 8½ guineas; while for 10 guineas there is a choice of three styles in spring wrap coats, the most notable, perhaps, being one finished with heavy cordings of its own material, and a belt closing with a handsome clasp. Or, at the same price, there is an afternoon gown of silk marocain, an adaptation of a Paris model, the draped skirt caught closely round the hips by sets of finely drawn gaugings. A veritable chef d'œuvre is this, of the delusive simplicity only expert fingers can invest with that indescribable air of chic and charm.

Having had a particularly satisfactory season with their knitted wool suits, jumpers, sports coats and scarves, the powers ruling here have been moved to unprecedented generosity in respect of the remaining stock, asking only 21s. for a jolly fleecy woollen cardigan knitted in a wide rib of reliable yarn, and 29s. 6d. for some knitted artificial silk coats in a variety of fashionable shapes and colours, an almost incredible drop occurring in an artificial silk jumper knitted in effective contrasting stripes, once 73s. 6d., now 21s. A most admirable opportunity also is provided at this sale for picking up odd sports skirts of really first-class materials, goods that range from 39s. 6d.

Twelve days only is the edict that has gone forth from the house of Debenham and Freebody, Wigmore Street, W., so there should be no standing on the order of visiting this prolific sale source, where every department has been subjected to the slash of the blue pencil, from inexpensive necessaries to magnificent French models. Where all is so good and covetable it is difficult to particularise, but without moving from under the roof at Wigmore Street wardrobes can be replenished throughout, stocks of piece materials laid in, household linens and damasks renewed, and such small furnishing accessories as lamp and candle shades, cushions and the like, all acquired at prices that spell real economy and an appreciable saving in every case.

Prospective brides are especially urged to visit the ladies' outfitting department in quest of exquisite French lingerie, petticoats, negligées, teagowns, etc. As an instance of the reductions pertaining to this section there are tea-frocks of artificial lace from 39s. 6d., dressing gowns in ripple cloth from 25s. 9d. and the very smartest little sleeveless tea-frocks of heavy quality satin or ninon broché on black grounds with various coloured designs, also a few pale colours, going at 89s. 6d.

Furs, it should be furthermore recalled, are a noted feature of the house, and the reductions placed on fur wrap-coats and cloaks are this season of a particularly noteworthy order, and the peltry here is only of the best and most reliable qualities: nothing cheap, shoddy or merely showy is ever being seen in these salons.

NOTES FOR EVERYMAN

A CATALOGUE FOR THE COUNTRYMAN.

NO one whose interest lies in the life of the countryside could fail to find the catalogue just issued by Messrs. Dicksons of Chester anything but absorbing reading. Not only does it contain information and prices of trees for planting of every imaginable kind, and notes upon afforestation, but such less general information as a good list of seeds for coverts and game foods for spring or autumn sowing, another of miscellaneous covert plants, and a copious list of trees and shrubs which may be planted in special situations, for anyone near town, for smoky districts, for chalky soils near the sea coast, and shrubs for bedding and in window boxes. The catalogue is well illustrated and extraordinarily wide in its scope, with an index which adds not a little to its usefulness.

NEW FROCKS FOR OLD.

There are a great many excellent dressmakers in the world, but not many of them bear away the palm for remodelling. On the whole, dressmakers object to it and refuse to put their hearts into the work. Lilla of 53, High Street, Clapham, S.W.4, is almost unique as making a speciality of remodelling, and doing this with the most remarkable success. Any frock, no matter where it was made, may be sent to her, and she will send sketches, suggestions and estimates free of charge; or if remodelling is not likely to prove satisfactory and would not be an economy, she returns the gown without hesitation. The accompanying sketches were made from two charming examples of Lilla's skill in transforming an old frock into a new one.

A REDUCTION IN MESSRS. HITCHINGS' PRICES.

An important item, well worthy of notice, and a straw which points plainly in the direction of the wind of prosperity, is the fact that Messrs. Hitchings, Limited, of 449, Oxford Street, W.1; 45, Knightsbridge, S.W.1; Liverpool, Manchester and Glasgow, are announcing great reductions in the prices of the baby carriages of which they have been leading manufacturers for more than fifty years. The high standard of quality which has all that time been maintained is the reason why a Hitchings' baby carriage is guaranteed by the name of the makers to be the best article of its sort procurable. The prices are now reduced to the lowest point consistent with their excellence of manufacture and workmanship, ball-bearing wheels are now being fitted to every model, and waterproof aprons are included in their price. For graceful lines, hard-wearing qualities, excellence of design and comfort for nurse and baby, nothing better could possibly be devised. Everyone interested should send to Messrs. Hitchings for their illustrated catalogue.

THE BRITISH GIRL ABROAD.

One of the most important branches of the work of the Y.W.C.A. is hat which is done abroad in countries where, very often, the Y.W.C.A. workers must be the only refuge of British girls stranded without friends and those otherwise without help and encouragement. The expense of keeping workers in India, China, Palestine and Rumania is very heavy, and an urgent appeal, which COUNTRY LIFE heartily endorses, is made for funds with which to carry on and extend this work. Contributions should be sent to Sir William Henry, C.I.E., Y.W.C.A., 26, George Street, W.1.

FOR PRIVATE DANCES.

Quite a number of people who would like to give a dance are deterred either because they have not room enough or because they dread all the disorder contingent on preparing and clearing up after such a festivity. For them it will be good news that the Portman Rooms in Baker Street, W., will shortly be available for private dances. The new teak floor is in process of being laid, other improvements are ready, and all will be completed within the next few weeks. It is some time now since the Portman Rooms were available for dances and other private functions. Their reopening should certainly prove a success. Messrs. Druce and Co., Limited, are now the proprietors, and to them all enquiries should be addressed.

THE WORK OF THE LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.

There is very little need to-day to stress the splendid work done by the Lifeboat Institution. It is almost with a sense of shame that such an appeal should be necessary that it is here put forward. The cost of the Lifeboat service during 1922 was £250,000 and an average of over eight lives has been saved every week during the year. No fewer than eight new motor lifeboats have been completed during the year and there are now thirty-eight of them in the Institution's fleet of two hundred and thirty-nine boats. The Institution is entirely supported by voluntary contributions, which should be addressed to 22, Charing Cross Road, W.C.

THE HISTORY OF HOVIS.

More than thirty years ago the process of milling was introduced which, by eliminating the germ from flour, brought it to a very high degree of whiteness. This was a gain to the eye, but a distinct loss in food value. The inventor of "Hovis" bread, Mr. Richard Smith of Macclesfield, perfected a process for correctly and scientifically treating the wheat germ as long ago as 1887, when "Hovis" bread was introduced. "Hovis" flour not only contains the whole of the germ and endosperm, ut an extra quantity to the extent of twenty-five per cent. of the whole with the result that "Hovis" is a household word.

A SALE OF WALLPAPERS.

Few things are more aggravating than to decide on redecoration or structural alteration and find one's work delayed by the rush of custom which all decorators experience in the spring months. It is by no means too early to take stock of what needs to be done, and in this connection the sale of wallpapers now taking place at Messrs. W. Whiteley's should certainly be made use of as a desirable opportunity of obtaining the very best wallpapers at substantial reductions, many of more than 25 per cent. Messrs. Whiteley's Building, Decorating and Electric Engineering Department is well known for the carrying out of decoration and reconstruction on the smallest or the largest scale. White, which has been so much in evidence in decoration in recent years, is now being largely superseded by colour. Messrs. Whiteley are obtaining some extraordinarily fine effects by the use of transparent colours stippled on a buff ground.

Late Tudor and Early Stuart (1558-1649).

By H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

Nearly 500 superb illustrations and plans, 63/- net; by post 2/- extra.

BRECCLES HALL, NORFOLK.

THIS volume illustrates the third period of our Domestic Architecture which includes the reign of Elizabeth and the first two Stuarts. In many respects this is the most beautiful and informative volume in this great work on our Historic Homes which will, when complete, so systematically and fully set forth and illustrate the entire history of English Domestic Architecture and Home Life that it will, most assuredly, form a primary and essential item in every library of reference, great or small, public or private, worthily taking its place beside such great national works as Murray's Dictionary of the English Language, and the Dictionary of National Biography.

The series is divided into the following distinctive chronological and dynastic periods:

1. NORMAN AND PLANTAGENET	1066-1485	(Now Ready)	4. LATE STUART	1649-1714	(Now Ready)
2. EARLY TUDOR	1485-1558	(In Preparation)	5. EARLY GEORGIAN	1714-1760	(Now Ready)
3. LATE TUDOR AND EARLY STUART	1558-1649	(Now Ready)	6. LATE GEORGIAN	1760-1820	(In Preparation)

A special illustrated prospectus of this magnificent work will be sent, post free, on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C. 2.

AN OLD MANOR HOUSE

BUILT OF RED BRICK. 400FT. ABOVE SEA LEVEL. 43 MILES FROM LONDON. CLOSE TO AN IMPORTANT RESIDENTIAL TOWN.

THE SOUTH FRONT.

This well-known MANOR HOUSE has a wonderful situation, facing due south, and commanding views of the beautiful pine and heather country and the Surrey Hills.

It has been carefully preserved, and modern conveniences have been installed without spoiling the old features and character of the building. The date inscribed on the wall is 1531.

The GARDENS are on the south side of the house and are designed in terraces. At the bottom of the gardens are the small lakes fed by a spring which rises out of the hill behind the house.

The HOUSE contains hall, drawing room, dining room, sitting room and two other small rooms, all of which are panelled except the dining room. Most of the panelling is of the XVIIIth Century period. The offices are excellent in every way—white tiled kitchen, servants' hall, menservant's bedrooms, etc. There are two beautiful staircases leading to the upper floors. There are altogether some twelve bedrooms; additional servants' accommodation can be obtained in the cottages adjoining the stables.

The electric light plant, water supply, and drainage system have been the subject of a great expenditure and should be efficient.

Two cottages and 100 ACRES, chiefly woodlands, are offered with the Manor House; additional land, farmbuildings, and cottages are available.

UNIQUE OPPORTUNITY FOR KEEN ANTIQUARY.

EAST ANGLIA (five miles from ancient town and station; two-and-a-quarter hours from London in a pretty village and charming country, with three-quarters of an acre of land, to which owner is willing to add one acre).—A small XVth century HOUSE, with early XVIIIth century addition in great disrepair, but possessing valuable ancient features that would well repay careful restoration. Close to it and easily connected by a covered way or wing, is the absolutely unique survival, in the guise of a barn of a Norman Lord's timber House (XIIth century), with three oak pillars having carved and moulded caps. The structural timbers are mostly sound. Re-thatched, repaired and re-floored it would make a fine hall, and be the only thing of its kind in England. It has been specially inspected by the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Buildings, and by Mr. P. M. Johnston, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A. and Mr. F. C. Eyles, the late Sir William St. John Hope, and Prince Fredk. Duleep Singh.—For full particulars and order to view apply to GEORGE B. WEBB, "Bayments," Stansfield, Clare, Suffolk.

The arable land is mainly of good quality, and the dwelling houses and steadings in good order. There is good low ground shooting. There is a frontage to the River Deveron of about two-and-a-half miles, and the fishing for both salmon and trout is a feature of the place. The Mansion House is beautifully situated on the banks of the Deveron. It contains four public rooms, five bedrooms, two dressing rooms, and full and ample kitchen and servants' accommodation. The House is lighted with acetylene gas, for the manufacture of which there is the necessary gashouse and installation. There is a garage or stable, coach-house and chauffeur's room, two cottages, and ample kennel accommodation, beside the one occupied by the keeper. Rothiemay Station on the main line of the L. & N.E. Ry. (Northern Scottish Section) is on the opposite side of the river to the house, and can be reached by boat.—For books of particulars, and all other information, apply to Messrs. C. & P. H. The Architecture of Robert & James Adam

By ARTHUR T. BOLTON, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A.

In two large folio volumes, containing about 700 superb illustrations, plans and drawings - - - - - - £8 8 0 net

THIS important work, which has been in preparation since 1913, forms a complete survey of the Architecture, Decoration and Furniture of the famous Adelphi Brethren, and constitutes a monumental record of the Adam style. Four generations have passed since the death of Robert Adam, yet his work has lost none of its attraction; and the esteem in which it is held to-day is even higher than at the zenith of his career. Although during the Greek and Gothic Revivals Adam architecture was freely destroyed, there still remains, as these volumes prove, a marvellous wealth of work, much of which is complete with the actual Furniture, Carpets and Hangings made to his designs. No country in the world can show equivalent instances of such historical preservation as are illustrated in these magnificent volumes.

A special prospectus of this work will be sent post free on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C.2.

An Open Fire without the old disabilities

THE open fire is rightly preferred to any other system of domestic heating.

If it is a raw coal fire, it has very serious disadvantages.

The raw coal fire requires constant attention and involves considerable domestic labour.

The raw coal fire increases dirt and dust within the house and pollutes the atmosphere outside.

If it is a modern gas fire, it has none of these drawbacks.

The gas fire provides heat just when and so long as it is required, without trouble for anyone.

The gas fire is clean; it makes no dirt, dust, smuts or smoke inside or outside the house.

"The 'Carola' is a perfect marvel"

Says an enthusiastic Owner of this PIANO-PLAYER in an unsolicited letter testifying to the HUMAN TOUCH of this instrument.

INSTEAD of giving a mere mechanical rendering of pieces like the ordinary player-piano, or a so-called reproduction of the performances of other pianists, the CAROLA enables you to give your own interpretation to music and express your own feelings in its performance.

"Touch" is the essential element of good playing. It is the soul of music.

The CAROLA gives you complete control over the touch in a way hitherto unattained in player-pianos.

The Lowlands,
Alderley Edge,
Cheshire.
December 15th, 1922.

MESSRS. BLÜTHNER & CO., LTD.,
LONDON, W.

DEAR SIRS,

About two months ago I first saw your advertisement of the "Carola" Piano-Player in "The Tatler," and wrote to you for particulars of same, and you then referred me to your Agents in Manchester, Messrs. Hime & Addison, where I went to first hear the "Carola," and I think it is only fair to let you know that ever since we bought this instrument it has been a perfect joy to my mother and myself, and also to all our friends who have heard it.

I am very fond of music, but have never been able to play sufficiently well to do more than amuse myself, and I have never before heard a Piano-Player that did not sound like a machine!

The "Carola" is a perfect marvel to me, and it is almost impossible to believe that it is a machine when played properly, as one can get a practically human touch when one has got used to it.

Another extraordinary point, and one that one hardly believes from the advertisement, until actually tried, is the wonderful ease with which one can pedal, owing to the Dodd's Valve, as to my mind the heavy pedalling has been a great drawback in the past.

I would also like to say that I have been particularly struck by the way in which Messrs. Hime & Addison have treated us, and if it had not been for their excellent offer to us for our former piano, we could not possibly have bought the "Carola."

I would like to say that you may willingly make use of this letter, as I feel others should have the chance of getting this wonderful instrument, and testimonials are sometimes a great help.

Yours truly,
(Signed) MARJORIE HERVEY.

The CAROLA is made in our LONDON factory and can be supplied in the celebrated Blüthner and other well-known makes of pianos, at quite moderate prices.

A small initial payment will secure the instrument.

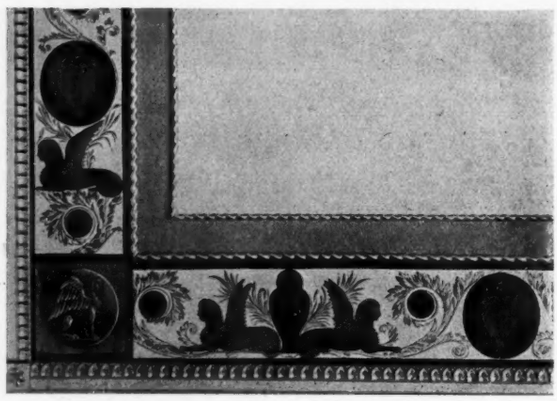
REGENCY DECORATION AND FURNITURE AT CRAWLEY HOUSE

THE PROPERTY OF THE REV. E. Y. ORLEBAR.

CRAWLEY HOUSE, which lies on the Buckinghamshire border of Bedfordshire, looking towards the Woburn Abbey woods, is one of those buildings which, as Thomas Hardy writes, are of "no marked antiquity, yet of well advanced age, older than stale novelty, but no canonised antique, faded, not hoary, looking at you from the still distant middle distance." In structure it is Late Georgian, in decoration Regency, if we use that term for a style that matured a few years before the actual date when George, Prince of Wales assumed the Regency. Both the Late Georgian portion and the mid-nineteenth century addition (which detracts from its symmetry) are of red brick; the older portion has a central pediment, a white painted cornice and door-case, in which the flanking columns are sand-painted in imitation of stone, and, within, a delicate fanlight lights the trim hall.



DETAIL OF WALLPAPER BORDER IN THE EGYPTIAN STYLE.

The small country house has often no accessible history. In the case of Crawley House a note book kept by the builder from 1777 to 1779, and a later detailed account by Colliss, the upholsterer, in 1806 tell the full story. The account of money expended for labour and materials begins in April 1777, when a labourer, George Evans, digs the foundations of the house, and timber is hewn and felled in readiness. Bricks and lime are carted mainly by the builder's teams from "Mr. Moore's kiln" from April until September. In May, oak scantling is bought for floors; a note in another part of the little notebook gives the actual date of the building as May 7th, 1777. Late in July, 1778, two guineas is expended "on liquor to the workmen at the House rearing"; by November a semicircular fanlight is bought from Francis Underwood, and the house is structurally finished, costing in all £985 4s. 3d. But, though the items are carefully entered after April, 1778, they are not added together.

Twenty-eight years later a very thorough repair and redecoration took place, and bay windows were thrown out of the morning and drawing-rooms, as was usual in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, to give the rooms a more cheerful aspect. The carpenter, bricklayer, glazier, stone mason and surveyor share nearly three hundred pounds between them. The house must have had a complete outfit to judge by the notes of money spent in one year.

ONE SIDE OF THE DRAWING-ROOM.

PILASTER PANEL.

the century-old aspect of the room is marvellously complete or has been restored to completeness. The statuary marble chimneypiece has moulded lintel and jambs, and trophies of musical instruments carved on the blockings instead of the more usual rosette or lion mask. The grate, with its severely simple moulded steel surround, is also unchanged, while above is the tall and handsome chimney-glass "in a burnished gould frame," with a lotus and anthemium frieze and Egyptian female heads to the pilasters, which figures in Colliss's bill.

The ceiling is green, the high dado pink, the wall surface a light grey, divided into large panels by narrow gilt rope mouldings, and wide horizontal borders in which a mummy divides two addorsed winged Egyptian sphinxes, and by vertical borders in which the same elements are used, but rearranged so that the sphinxes do not stand upon their heads. The dark monochrome lunette over the door is the worse for a century's wear, but the similar pilaster panel by the bay window has deserted Egypt for a classical treatment in which a muse figures, for wallpapers at this time, according to Sir John Soane, "exhibited such specimens of decoration that the admirers of the Loggia of the Vatican could not see them without rendering due praise to them."

The detail of the wallpaper bordering and pier glass is Egyptian, a reflection of French taste, when Bonaparte's expedition to Syria and Egypt in 1798-1801 naturally brought home Egyptian motifs, sphinxes, winged globes hieroglyphics, lotus-headed capitals and scarabs with the Egyptian animal-headed deities as supports for furniture. In 1804 Deuon's book upon Egyptian antiquities was published in the Strand, and Thomas Hope a few years later shows what could be done with Egyptian motifs massively and monumentally treated. He recommends the young artist, however, to leave this difficult style alone, since "the hieroglyphic figures, so universally employed by the Egyptians, can afford us little pleasure on account of their meaning, since this is seldom intelligible, they can afford us still less gratification on account of their outline, since this is never agreeable." Hope carried his archæological revival too far in his Egyptian designs, but the motifs used with reticence, as in this interior, have a charm and distinction of their own.

The chairs painted to imitate calamander wood, with lines of yellow paint to indicate the fashionable brass inlay, the "two handsome Grecian couches with squabbs and feather bolsters," the "window couch," the rosewood worktable, the "two japanned bugle-horn polescreens," the two rosewood cardtables that figure in Colliss's long account are still to be seen. A generous provision of sofas was a characteristic of this period, and these were modelled after the Greek and Roman couches, except for the legs, for which the sabre-shaped curve was preferred to the turned vertical supports of classic originals. The position in the illustration is correct; a visitor to the house of General Washington in Philadelphia observing that the sofa to the left of the fireplace sloped across the room. The black and yellow carpet—rarest of survivals—was, no doubt, from Drury, the carpet manufacturer, and its formal design of griffins and pateræ dates from a time when such details were considered as suitable underfoot as overhead. The excellent condition of these century-old furniture and textiles is due to the fact that many of them were relegated to an attic, in which they were discovered by Professor A. E. Richardson (who was called on to put in new offices and a water supply), and whose knowledge of and informed taste for the neo-classic buildings and furniture is well known.

Of the remaining furniture, there is in the morning-room a mahogany bookcase and secretaire which cost £94 10s., and which is described as "an elegant mahogany Liptick (sic) shape front Library bookcase with a secretary drawer, and doors under, ornamented with handsome panels, the top brass trellace and green silk curtains," which is the most expensive single item, while in the dining parlour is the "handsome Eliptic shaped mahogany sideboard with pedestal cupboard and plate warmer lined with tin, Lyon claw feet and brass fretwork top and backboard," which shows how far English furniture had wandered in search of Grecian massiveness.

The Regency style has been under a cloud; and hence, while it is possible to find interiors by architects of the late eighteenth century, such as Robert Adam and Leverton, in their untouched splendour, the unaltered Regency interiors in England can be counted on the fingers of one hand. The perfect preservation and consistency of Crawley House, therefore, makes it a document of interest "awakening on that account the instinct of reminiscences more decidedly than remoter, far grander memorials."

THE BEVAN SALE

THE CHART BY CAPTAIN COOK—JAPANESE PRINTS, BROCKET HALL.

THE second portion of the Gerard Lee Bevan collection, removed from Littlecote, Hungerford, Berks, which will be dispersed by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson on February 9th, is remarkable for the many choice specimens of English porcelain it contains, while the furniture is of corresponding quality. Nearly every plate has its pedigree of descent from famous collections; the Montagu Guest, the Trapnell, the R. M. Wood and the Massey-Mainwaring are a few of those.

The gracefully posed and exquisitely painted figures of Chelsea ware are here in force and of the first quality, as we see in the figures of a sportsman and his wife: he, in green cloak lined with red, gorgeous gold-patterned waistcoat and white breeches, holds a duck and gun, with his dog by his foot; she, wearing a cloak of the same colour and a skirt of rich design, is in spirited pose with an upward tilt of the face. By the side of each is a may-stump, and they stand on white scroll bases dexterously touched with gilt. These have the gold anchor mark, which also appears on the rare figure of John Coan, the English Dwarf, gaily vested in red coat, with blue and gold bordered sash, who is accompanied by his dog carrying a letter with which he spells his master's name on the base of scroll form, decorated with flowers and inscribed. Others are the pairs of a negro and negress, a shepherd and shepherdess, both of the red anchor mark; the harvester and gleaner and a sportsman, with powder-flask and dead game, bear the gold anchor mark and are in the manner of Roubiliac. More triumphs of the Chelsea manufactory are evident in the white dish decorated with a brilliant red, purple and white exotic bird standing on a spray of gilt foliage in a scroll panel with outline of turquoise and gold, beyond which is a Chelsea crimson ground modelled with feathers and gilded with sprays, beyond which again are gilt scrolls in relief. Closely akin to it is a pair of flat vases with handles of pierced foliage scrolls and finely painted with interiors and figures in heart-shape panels on a crimson ground, upon which are gilt floral sprays. There are some delightful smaller objects of Chelsea china.

Prominent among the old Worcester porcelain is a large modelled leaf jug with a white scroll handle touched with gold and masked lip, decorated with swags and flowers in white shaped panels outlined in puce on a brilliant canary-yellow ground. Upon this are sprays of flowers in the Hizen taste, while the brim bears a Vandyke border of flowers, and the base of the neck a pattern in coral. It is a famous piece. Of canary ground also are two plates painted with groups and sprays of flowers. Above all is a fine tea and coffee service with shaped apple-green borders with gilt scroll outline and white ground, whereon are painted with extraordinary skill groups of fruit and insects. It is of twenty-seven pieces, mostly bearing the simulated Dresden mark and No. 9 in blue. There are other fine examples too numerous for mention here. Of other porcelain there are Bow bird subjects, particularly the pair of a peacock and peahen in all the glory of rich colour standing on may-stumps (said to have been of Bristol), a pair of Bristol basins and a few Chinese specimens.

The furniture section includes a rare Jacobean refectory table with a carved frieze of masks and dolphins and the letters I.E.L. 1614, standing on six baluster legs with moulded underframe; fine elbow chairs of Charles II period, the backs carved with Stuart roses, tulips and leaves, bearing the initials (probably those of members of one family) C.E., E.E., R.E. and T.E., with a top of shells and plumes; the elbows and seat rails are carved with foliage, the supports and front stretcher spirally turned; a most elaborate pair of James II elbow chairs, their backs with shaped cane panels and decorated with intricate carving of amorini, female busts, shells, foliage and fruit in great profusion, while the legs are fashioned as caryatid boys' figures; a very fine William Kent bookcase in mahogany, with cornice as an architrave with bold foliated scrolls starting from an eagle's head (the whole of most dignified design); a winged easy chair of Queen Anne's time, covered with needlework representing figures, trees, landscape, etc., in petit-point in a setting of scrolls, etc., in gros-point with gold thread; and a set of four tapestried chairs of Chippendale mahogany frames, the seats and backs covered with fine tapestry representing different groups of flowers with ribbons on a blue ground. These are probably by Paul Saunders. The sale also includes glass and some interesting works of art.

On January 23rd, Messrs. Christie will dispose of English and other porcelain, among which is part of a fine Worcester tea service painted with panels of flowers in the Oriental taste and blue bands with gold foliage, painted with red medallions, and Wedgwood, Nankin porcelain and objects of art. The day following they will begin the dispersal of the property of the late Admiral Sir William Fanshawe Martin, Bt., G.C.B. Very great interest is centred in the Chart of the St. Lawrence River, from Green Island to Cape Carrouge, by Captain Cook, and measuring 9ft. 7ins. long by 22ins. deep, which played a great part in the famous Siege of Quebec. The navigation of the river was very difficult and full of risks for the English fleet to ascend to support Wolfe. No correct chart was available. Captain Cook was employed to make a new one, which meant work in front of the French fortified camp at Montmorency and Beauport, and could only be carried on at night. The chart proved so accurate and useful that never since then has it been necessary to publish any other. A great achievement, it was but a minor incident in the career of an extraordinary man. To be sold then are the miniatures of the Martin family, objects of vertu and naval relics, with which are two gold angels of Henry VII, second coinage, which were dug out of the foundation of the City abutment of London Bridge, 1828; and a valuable group of family decorations and silver. The latter includes a dinner service of 1,960 oz. of pieces made from 1733–1782, and an epergne designed as a Chinese pagoda, by Thomas Powell, 1763, weighing 365 oz., the property of the late Mr. Henry W. Hope of Luffness, N.B., also other properties. Messrs. Christie will sell, on the 25th, the Fanshawe Martin porcelain, and porcelain, pottery and decorative furniture from other sources, including two Hispano-Moresque dishes of the sixteenth century, one containing a shield charged with a lion, the shield of the other bears a wolf in white on a blue ground; and a quantity of Sèvres; while towards the end of the sale there comes up an old English woolwork carpet with flowers n octagonal panels and red rosettes on white with a central monogram and acanthus border. On the 26th, pictures and drawings belonging o the Fanshawe Martin property, including nany naval pictures, with those by Pocock epicting the exploits of Captain T. Byam Martin in the first years of the nineteenth entury, and paintings from various sources, will be disposed of.

Japanese colour prints, surimono, and Chinese works, from different properties will e sold by Messrs. Sotheby on January 29th nd following day. The collection of prints is emarkable for brilliant impressions and excelent condition, and is representative of the reat artists from Moronobu to Hiroshige. Remarkable is it also for the number of rarities. There are four of the only copies recorded from a set of Yedo Hakkei by Shigemasa, a rare print of Raikō, and the head of the Shuten Doji by Shunshō, and two very rare Hoso-ye prints by Shunkō. Of Otamaro there are many works, including a very brilliant impression of Hanaōgi of Ogi-ya with her attendants, and (the only recorded copy of the subject) "Preparing food by moonlight." Surimono by Hiroshige are very rare, but here are two of a set with a red sign No-ichi. Mica prints are rare; here is one by Sharaku of Sanokawa Ichimatsu, bust portrait in female character as a Geisha holding a fan; and another by Utamaro (Kitagawa) of the hare hour, 5 a.m. to 7 a.m., "A Housemaid," one of the set "Customs of beautiful women by the clock"; and another, in parts mica, printed by Yeishi, "Tokiwagi of Kana-ya," one of a set "The first dress of the New Year." Of the curious red prints used as charms against disease and every ill that flesh is heir to, there is one by Kunisada showing Nakamura Shikwan II in the rôle of Shōki, the figure being in red in the Kano style, to be sold on the second day, when a series of fan leaves as pictures not yet made up into fans, and very rarely found in the present state, are to be dispersed. One of the curiosities of the second day's sale is a Chinese Tan-tiao, a portrait of "A good and peaceful Lady," full length, seated, by Nanhai K'un-hui, in colours on paper, which has across the top the above title in the handwriting of and signed by Li Hung Chang, with the date 6th year, 1867.

On March 12th and two following days Messrs. Foster will sell the pictures, works of art, furniture and library at Brocket Hall, Hatfield, Herts, by order of Lord Walter Talbot Kerr, Admiral of the Fleet. Originally the home of the Brocket family, the Hall passed to Thomas Read through marriage with Mary, fifth daughter of Sir John Brocket, Kt. In the eighteenth century it was purchased by Sir Matthew Lamb, who rebuilt it, and from Viscount Melbourne it passed to the Earls Cowper and through them to the present owner. A link with the original owners appears in the sale in the form of portraits, attributed to Sir A. More, of Sir John and Lady Brocket; but the chief picture is the portrait of George, Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV), by Sir Joshua Reynolds. Clothed in a scarlet coat and wearing the ribbon of the Garter, the Prince stands beside his charger, with drawn sword. The group is most spirited. It was painted in 1784, and formed a present from the Prince to Peniston, Viscount Melbourne, who was Lord of his Chamber. By Sir Francis Cotes is a fine portrait of Lady Melbourne, wife of the first lord; while there are a good landscape by Van Goyen, pastels by Gardner and Rosalba, with other pictures and drawings.

The furniture is of great interest and includes a pair of Louis XVI commodes of satinwood of shaped fronts with three cupboards enclosed by panelled doors, the whole inlaid with rosettes in diaper pattern, with chased ormolu friezes, corner mounts and centre base; each is stamped "M. Carlin ME."; and a Louis XV marquetry toilet table of rosewood and mahogany inlaid with flowers, foliage and musical trophies in various woods. The English furniture includes a pair of Sheraton satinwood three-tier side-tables of semi-circular fronts, the friezes inlaid with shells and fruit; a Chippendale mahogany bureau-bookcase, the architrave with fret panels and dentil frieze; eighteen Hepplewhite mahogany chairs carved with festoons of husks, festoons and medallions; Chippendale mahogany armchairs upholstered in tapestry, another set in gros-point, and others in Chinese Chippendale design; a pair of William Kent side-tables, and a clock by Tompion.

On January 10th Messrs. Robinson, Fisher and Harding sold old English furniture, porcelain, bronzes, Persian carpets and rugs. At their sale of modern pictures and drawings, engravings, etchings and books, on the day following, "Titian's first essay in colour," a famous picture by W. Dyer, R.A., in which the youthful Titian was painted from William Brand of Eaton Place, S.W., whose sister was the wife of the painter, reached the sum of £903 (Sampson). D. Van de Goote.

A BOOK ON ENGLISH FURNITURE

Old English Walnut and Lacquer Furniture, by R. W. Symonds. (Herbert Jenkins.)

MR. R. W. SYMONDS' 1922 book on English furniture shows advance. It is decidedly more mature than his "Present State of Old English Furniture," published in 1921. As to the latter, it was pointed out in these pages that, full as it was of interesting matter, it was marred by youthful dogmatisms. Rules were constructed for our guidance, clear cut and without hint of exceptions, however numerous these might be. That is now remedied and qualifying words permit the reader to reach correct conclusions. Thus whereas in 1921 he will have gathered that no marquetry was used in England until it came in "suddenly" after 1660, now he sees that this is true only of what Mr. Symonds rightly qualifies as "veneered marquetry." Again in 1921 we were told categorically that English walnut furniture of the first third of the eighteenth century "relied for its decoration on the fine figure and grain of the wood." I ventured to point out that examples illustrated by him, and dated 1720 and 1730 respectively, certainly showed fine figured veneer, but that their decorative value was still more dependent on low relief carving set on the veneer. I added that this form of enrichment "was worked out of a sheet of walnut no more than a quarter of an inch thick and then glued so securely and delicately that not only has it withstood two centuries of wear, but the junction is so invisible that it needs a magnifying glass to reveal the fact that the veneer and the carving are not out of the same piece." Now we find Mr. Symonds abandoning fine figure and grain as the sole sources of decorative effect at this period and teaching us that "sometimes carved ornamentation was used in conjunction with walnut veneer for the decoration of the rails and splats of the backs of chairs and settees. Such carving was executed in very low relief from a thin layer of walnut which was glued on to the top of the veneer of the splat and side rails, giving it every appearance of having been carved out of the solid wood" (page 34): which I cannot well dissent from, as these are nearly my own words. Of course Mr. Symonds knew this quite well all the time. But probably he was new to book making in 1921 and found difficulty in conveying his entire meaning. Although only a year has passed, yet practice is already making perfect, and his information is far more complete and reliable. Still, he must take care, must learn the danger of making quite definite statements unless he has given himself the trouble of verifying them. Thus in his title page he proclaims, in all the pomp and ceremony of capitals, that his sixty-five illustrations are "of exceptional interest to collectors and students" because none of them "have been hitherto reproduced." After so much promise of pastures new it is rather a shock to find oneself among old friends. For if Mr. Symonds had looked at the 1918 and 1919 volumes of the Burlington Magazine—not an unknown field to "collectors and students"—he would have found depicted the identical pieces which he uses for his Plates V D, VI B, XIII, XIX A and XXXII. So long as the plates quite aptly illustrate and complement the text it matters very little whether they have or have not appeared somewhere before. But it shakes belief in the accuracy of the text if a prominently placed claim of this sort is unfounded. Nevertheless, my belief in the accuracy of very much of what Mr. Symonds tells me in this volume survives the shake. He has worked diligently and intelligently along by-paths where I have not even sauntered. I accept his information with grateful thanks, and certainly advise all whom old English furniture interests to carefully read all he has to say on the changing technique of the cabinetmaker's craft—on veneering, dovetailing and constructive methods generally, native and Continental, old and new. On all matters relating to present value—the forms and varieties now especially sought after, the importance of untouched surfaces, of original condition—Mr. Symonds speaks with the authority of experience, and no one knows better or has described more fully the cunning practices of the faker. The book has much merit and gives promise of something even better as time goes on. H. Avray Tipping.

THE AUTOMOBILE WORLD.

ON STARTING A CAR

IT was brought home to me in a rather striking manner recently what a large number of motorists there are who have very crude and entirely inadequate ideas of how to start their cars. The coming of the electric starter and the availability of various "gadgets," has robbed starting of many of its difficulties and terrors. But even so, the best of cars will on occasion develop a fit of the sulks and will for no apparent reason refuse to start as promptly and in as lady-like a manner as it ought. Quite apart from the question of difficult starting on account of some minor derangement which the owner does not suspect and therefore fails to detect, there is, I am convinced, scope for a few notes on starting a car that is in more or less "perfect" order.

USE AND ABUSE OF THE ELECTRIC STARTER.

In the first place there are some very crude misconceptions as to the function of the electric starter. Who has not seen an owner take his seat at the wheel, depress his starter button and keep it depressed until the engine fires? On one occasion I timed an owner of an A.C. light car to run the electric starter for five minutes. It was, if I remember rightly, at Brooklands track, where one might have thought such serious ignorances might very soon have been dispelled from the mind of this particular driver. I was too far away to interfere and, possibly, interference would not have been welcomed. An electric starter has very distinct limitations, or rather, more accurately, the electric batteries which work the starter have their limitations. To take, in natural order, the first start of the day. If the engine is too stiff for the electric starter to work easily and at its normal speed, it is simply asking for the most serious of trouble to keep the button depressed and to force the starter to attempt to do work of which it is not capable. Starting a car first thing in the morning, the electric starter may be tried, but if it does not prove capable of turning the engine over at practically the same speed at which it will turn it when warm, the starter should be entirely forgotten and recourse taken to the handle. This, of course, is an admission of weakness on the part of the electrical equipment. It is unfortunate that it is necessary to make it, but there it is, and it is a fact that the electric starter will often be found wanting when it is most required.

EFFECTS OF LUBRICATING OIL.

As the reason for this incapacity of the electric starter lies at the root of many general starting troubles, it will be profitable to examine it a little more closely. When an engine is cold the lubricant with which it is, or ought to be, amply furnished becomes partially congealed and in some cases may attain a state approximating solidity. Admittedly an oil that does this is not a good oil, but many such lubricants are on the market and are regularly fed into motor car engines. Owner drivers always are and, as far as one can see, always will be careless in their selection of oils for their engine. Because a racing man at Brooklands uses a certain oil they think that the same must be good oil for their engine and for their use of a car. Because a motor cyclist buys the thickest oil that he can get, they deduce, quite wrongly, that such an oil would be suitable for their engine, possibly of an entirely different type. If it did not give scope for serious abuse, I would like to recommend every owner of a car to use the thinnest oil that experience demonstrates will work satisfactorily. Unfortunately, the experience is apt to be expensive and as a matter of practice it is inadvisable to recommend owners to experiment for themselves, but if they will rely on the recommendations of the makers of the car they will not go far wrong. First thing in the morning then, the engine is cold and the oil is stiff; pistons are, figuratively, gummed in their cylinders, and crank-shaft bearings may be encased in something like vaseline. When the engine has attained a working temperature all this lubricant is fluid and all the working parts may revolve, or reciprocate, freely, with a minimum of friction.

Starting an engine at any time necessitates sufficient speed for three things: (1) To induce a "fire-able" mixture from the carburettor, (2) To generate an adequate spark at the sparking plugs (dependent on engine speed only when magneto ignition is employed), and (3)—which perhaps ought to come first—To overcome the resistance of compression. If on account of engine stiffness, due to any cause, the most probable being semi-solidity of the lubricating oil owing to low temperature, the starter cannot turn the engine fast enough, insistence on using it will mean ruination to the batteries.

FREEING AN ENGINE.

Therefore, the first thing to be done with an engine in the morning is to make it free to turn. Sometimes this can be effected by turning the starting handle by hand quite slowly, so that no strenuous effort is required. When compression taps are fitted it is quite easy to pour a little petrol into each and this will serve a double purpose. It will help to free the engine so that it may be turned readily, and it will fill the cylinders with "fire-able" mixture. This is the simplest and most easily employed of all the methods for ensuring easy starting with engines that are not fitted with any special "gadget."

CONDENSATION.

But when the engine is cold another difficulty is added to that due to its stiffness. This is condensation of petrol from the carburettor on its way to the cylinders, or even after it has been admitted. When the fuel leaves the carburettor jet it does so in the form of a wet spray which theoretically, although seldom practically, becomes an almost dry gas by the time it enters the cylinders. When the engine is cold this damp spray strikes against the cold walls of the induction pipe and of the cylinders, if it reaches them, and immediately returns to liquid form, in which state it is of course, not mixed with air and does not constitute an explosive mixture. This fault is especially noticeable on engines with exposed induction pipes—the longer the pipe the worse the difficulty—and once such engines have been freed so as to turn easily, they may generally be started immediately after boiling water has been poured over the induction pipe. With a water-cooled engine, filling the radiator with hot water, and, with an air-cooled engine, pouring hot water over the induction pipe, will often secure a start when all other means have failed. Unfortunately, however, hot water is not always available and what is wanted, therefore, is something that will discharge the same function.

Left: The wrong way to start a car. The operator has the handle in a closed grip of the hand, he is pushing it downwards and he has his hand resting on a lamp for support, obviously likely partially to displace the lamp if practised frequently. Centre: The right way to hold a starting handle. The operator is standing well away from the car, he has the handle in an open grip of the hand and he is pulling it upwards. This view incidentally illustrates a feature of the Renault car that might be extensively copied as a very useful assistance when starting is difficult. Between the starting handle and the dumb iron may be seen a small lever which is a starting motor switch. Thus a single operator may swing the handle and with a suitable change of position also use the starting motor. Generally two operators are required for doing this simultaneously. Right: The kick starting method.

Temporarily choking the main air inlet of the carburettor with a rag, or even with the hand of an assistant held over it, exercises a powerful check on condensation and also exerts the further beneficial influence of enriching the mixture. It must be remembered that when the car is approached for the first time during a day the cylinders and induction passages are full of residual air, which, naturally, weakens the mixture and, besides probably reducing it to a point at which it cannot explode, also tends to encourage condensation. This is the reason why so many modern cars are now being fitted with air stranglers to their carburettors. Such a fitting has much in its favour and nothing against it, and once again it exercises a further beneficial effect tending to increase the suction on the jet so that the fuel comes out more violently and therefore stands a better chance of adequate vaporisation. The great thing to remember is that always when starting a car engine-speed is relatively low and, therefore, the suction on the jet is weakest when all requirements demand that it should be strongest.

HOW TO "SWING" AN ENGINE.

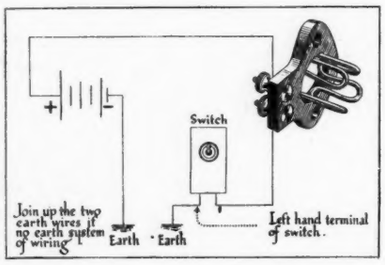
Some drivers find a great difficulty in turning an engine by hand at sufficient speed. They make the mistake of thinking that a prolonged swing, say twelve complete revolutions at, say, the rate of fifty revolutions a minute is likely to be more effective than one swing, or even a quarter of a swing at the rate, say, of a hundred revolutions a minute. How is this high speed to be attained? One of the illustrations shows more clearly than could any written description a method that I always employ for starting engines with a good compression, and especially is it effective with two-cylinder engines. Use the handle as if it were a kick starter; place the foot on it, give one or two gentle pushes against the compression, letting the handle swing up and down and then give a violent push downwards. For that half turn, or quarter turn, of the crank-shaft the speed will be something like 100 r.p.m., and generally the effect will be to start the engine, when twenty seconds continuous swinging of the handle or operation of the starting motor would have no effect. Once the engine has given a few spits or half-hearted explosions, there is no objection to a return to the starting motor, letting it do its work for between five and ten seconds and then seated in the car, as one would be, keeping the engine running by judicious opening and closing of the accelerator pedal.

HOLDING A STARTING HANDLE.

Before leaving the subject of the starting handle, it may not be inopportune to give a word of warning as to how this should be held. Never hold the starting handle with a close grip of the hand, i.e., with the thumb round it. Always hold it with the open hand so that if there is a back-fire no harm will be done. Broken thumbs and wrists are the penalty of improper holding of the handle. The foot method of operating the starting handle eliminates danger from back-fires as, should there be one, the foot is simply thrown clear.

TREATING THE SPARKING PLUGS.

Reverting to the treatment of an obstinate engine with which the owner has satisfied himself there is nothing radically wrong, one can do things with sparking plugs that will considerably assist starting. Take out the plugs, fill their cups with petrol and place them on the ground more or less vertically and then light the petrol. When this has all burnt away any deposit that might have tended to lessen the insulation of the plug will disappear and the plug points themselves will be warm, so that the possibility of condensation on them is practically wiped out. No time should be wasted in replacing the plugs in the engine before they have had time to get cold. Many an obstinate engine will be started quite easily after this treatment, while it has baffled all previous efforts. Some engines are, unfortunately, not fitted with compression taps and so the sparking plugs must be removed before petrol can be injected into the cylinders and when plugs are removed for this purpose it is idle not to take this further precaution of warming them, petrol being injected into the cylinders just as the plugs are nearing the end of their burning. I have heard that some of the priming plugs that combine compression tap and sparking plug are quite satisfactory, but in the absence of practical experience I can only say that it seems at least probable that the valves with which the taps are opened may become welded more or less solid in the course of use and under the action of the heat of the engine.



A diagram of the Instarter, showing its "business" component, i.e., the copper wire in the induction pipe which is heated electrically.

"GADGETS" TO ASSIST STARTING.

There are on the market all sorts of "gadgets" to assist starting on engines that are habitually difficult. Mostly they work on one of three principles: (1) The reduction of the air supplied to the carburettor, or a temporary increase in jet size, which from the practical point of view is much the same thing. (2) The admission of atomised petrol into the induction pipe independently of the carburettor, and (3) Some form of electric heating for the carburettor, or the induction pipe.

I propose to say nothing about the first, because the supply of air may be temporarily stopped by the quite commendable method of choking the pipe with rag and an alteration of jet size cannot be effected unless the carburettor is constructed on a principle that allows for it, in which case the necessary control is usually fitted by the makers. Of the second kind, one of the best I have ever seen is the "Euk" easy starter, which has now been on the market for several years. It consists of a small tank of petrol which is mounted on the dashboard and in which is incorporated a pump. From the tank to a convenient point in the induction pipe is taken a small pipe terminating in a fine nozzle. Operation of the pump on the dashboard forces into the induction pipe a fine spray of petrol and if the engine starter be depressed at the same time, presuming that the engine is free to turn and that the ignition is all right, an immediate starting up seems inevitable. The limitation of the "Euk" is that if the carburettor is exceptionally well water jacketed or if it be bolted right up against the cylinder block, an admission point for the nozzle may be difficult to find, but I have never yet seen an induction system to which the "Euk" starter could not be applied by the exercise of a little ingenuity.

Of the third class, one of the latest and best examples is that known as the "Instarter." This consists of a coil of insulated wire which is placed by means of a suitable washer at the junction between the carburettor and induction pipe proper. Connected through a resistance and a switch on the dashboard to the batteries the wire in the induction pipe may be raised to a high temperature so that, when the semi-liquid petrol from the carburettor strikes it, the petrol is, or ought to be, immediately vaporised and so passed on to the cylinders in the form of a gas. At the time of writing I have had no practical experience of the "Instarter," as, unfortunately, the sample sent for me to try was of a lower voltage than that of the batteries of the car, but I am hoping to get this defect rectified and to give my experiences in due course. The device seems very promising and the only "snag" that, on the surface at least, appears against it, is that it must exercise some restriction of the effective area of the induction pipe and so reduce the amount of charge admitted to the engine under ordinary conditions of work.

A variation of this idea is found in one or two devices that have been placed on the market from time to time for actually heating the mixing chamber of the carburettor by means of an electrically heated coil of wire. In this case, of course, no restriction of the effective area of the induction pipe would be exercised, but probably more current would be required to work the device as, besides the wire itself, the actual metal of the carburettor would have to be heated.

It was my intention to say something in this note about engine derangements that would affect starting, such as air leaks, carburettor faults and ignition difficulties, but on second thought it would appear that these are sufficiently important to deserve an article to themselves, and so, in conclusion, I will be content with giving a few hints on starting in the ordinary way, which I imagine will be superfluous to many readers, but may be appreciated by many more. Who at some time or another has not tried to start a car of which the ignition was turned off, or who, after having started a car successfully has not been baffled when it has stopped and has wasted many valuable minutes in diagnosing the cause without ascertaining whether the petrol was turned on? A motor car engine cannot be expected to run without ignition and without fuel.

Nearly every maker of a carburettor will tell his clients, either officially or unofficially, that flooding before attempting to start is quite unnecessary and yet there are very few carburettors that are not provided with some means of flooding and it is very seldom indeed that a car can be started from cold except under ideal test conditions without previous flooding of the carburettor. If a car is normal as regards its starting, after the flooding of the carburettor and the switching on of the ignition, it should start on the second sharp pull up of the starting handle, or after about five seconds spinning by the starting motor.

A very simple and often effective method of facilitating starting is to flood the carburettor well, open the throttle about one third and with the ignition switched off give the engine a few vigorous turns either by hand or by the starting motor. Then with the ignition switched on, the next spin by hand, or by motor,

Opinion of a Satisfied Owner:

". . . . I have just completed 15,000 miles without an involuntary stop, and never yet had the engine taken down, the valves ground, the clutch adjusted, or collan oil put on the clutch leather, nor had I to touch a nut or sparking plug (the original plugs are still in use) and my 'Sunbeam' is running absolutely as well as ever. should have the desired effect. This is a very simple tip which is always worth trying. Many cars require much tinkering before being persuaded to start if they have not had this preliminary preparation, the function of which is to fill the cylinders with fuel which may or may not be partially "gassified," so that when a spark occurs at the plug points it has something on which to operate beyond the charge induced by the same revolution that is accompanied by a spark.

It has been stated that all these hints and tips for starting are given as suitable for application if the engine is in perfect condition. This, of course, is not strictly correct, for if an engine is absolutely perfect it should start at one pull up of the starting handle every time. My meaning, however, should be quite clear. It is that these instructions may be applied to an engine with which there is nothing radically wrong. If there is any derangement capable of cure which affects starting, it is obviously absurd to adopt these doctoring methods, but one should strike at the root of the trouble and remove the cause of the difficulty. In the next article on this subject it is intended to give some instructions as to the detection of faults that may affect starting and how they may be cured. W. H. J.

An Extraordinary Legal Decision.

ON various occasions we have referred to what have, superficially at least, appeared remarkable, or even unjust, decisions in law court cases where motorists have been involved. Of them all, what is easily the most extraordinary is one recently chronicled by the Autocar. It concerns a decision at Runcorn, and it is not inopportune to mention in this connection that by far the majority of these mysterious cases take place in the northern Midlands. It would appear that, for some reason that we cannot attempt to explain, British justice, as administered between the two horizontal lines drawn through Shrewsbury and, say, the northern shore of Morecambe Bay, is very different from that administered elsewhere, with the exception of one or two isolated areas having as their centres riverside towns in Surrey.

The Runcorn case was a county court affair in which the plaintiff was the driver of a motor cycle and sidecar, the defendant the driver of a horse-drawn cab. "The plaintiff, on rounding a corner, saw the defendant's cab coming towards him on the wrong side of the road. Since the driver of the cab did not show any signs of pulling over to his near side, the plaintiff stopped his motor cycle, the distance between the two vehicles then being, according to the evidence, five or six yards. The defendant in the action continued his course, with the result that the horse collided with the motor cycle and very considerable damage was done to the latter." "The county court judge did not call upon the defendant, but gave judgment for him with costs, saying that the plaintiff apparently had not realised the difficulty of driving a horse, and adding that he had failed to prove negligence on the part of the defendant."

As regards comment on this apparently extraordinary decision we can only agree with the Autocar, from which paper the extracts above quoted are taken. It is "exceedingly difficult to express an opinion on actions of this kind unless one is in possession of a verbatim report of the evidence, but it would be interesting to ascertain the judge's view of what would constitute legal negligence in these circumstances. One would have thought that the omission of any signal by a vehicle driver intending to pull up on the wrong side would have been, at any rate, prima facie evidence of negligence. From the report of the case which has reached us there was not, apparently, any attempt on the part of the defendant to avoid a collision." For ourselves, however, we would like to add that if the defendant in this action was unable to control his horse, or if his animal was so difficult to drive that it could not be controlled by anybody, either the defendant, his horse, or both, ought to be prohibited from using the roads, on which they are an undoubted danger to all other road users. We wonder what would have been the result of this case had the positions of plaintiff and defendant been reversed—in other words, had the defendant been the driver of any type of mechanically propelled vehicle.

Use of "Trade" Numbers.

THE R.A.C. succeeded recently in securing the dismissal at Westminster Court of summonses issued against a member and a driver for aiding and abetting, and against a firm of motor car dealers for the alleged wrongful use of a general identification mark on a car. The member in question, contemplating the purchase of a secondhand car, arranged with the dealers to send the car to his flat at a certain time in order that he might have a trial run. It so happened that at the moment the car reached the flat the member's wife, who was about to leave on a holiday, was waiting for a taxicab which had been ordered but had not arrived, and on the member's suggestion the car was taken to the railway station with his wife and luggage, enabling her to catch the train and at the same time to see the car. On arrival at the station the police informed the driver that trade numbers could not be used for such a purpose, and, subsequently, summonses were issued. The R.A.C. solicitor satisfied the court that the journey was performed as part of the projected trial run, following which the purchase of the car was completed.

The End of the Sidecar?

THE last few years have seen an enormous increase in the popularity of the motor cycle and sidecar combination. It is a popularity that is easily explainable, for this outfit gives the most economical motoring for two with reasonable comfort and safety to both. While the sidecar itself is probably the most comfortable vehicle of any on the road for its occupants, the performance of a properly constructed and adequately powered sidecar combination is equal to that of a first-class car, while in reliability the motor cycle and sidecar is but little inferior. Always with the proviso that it be properly used, the sidecar combination will take its owner and his friends anywhere where a car can go and to many places where very few cars can venture. The economy of the turnout which will normally cover fifty miles on a gallon of petrol with oil and tyre expenses very low indeed have given it an appeal which obviously could not be resisted by a large section of the community.

But the sidecar combination suffers from one inherent fault. However comfortable the sidecar may be for its occupant and however efficient the weather protection it provides, the motor cycle exposes the driver to every wind that blows and every spot of rain that falls. In unfavourable weather the motor cycle is not an attractive method of travel. It may be comfortable as regards the driving position offered, it may be thoroughly well sprung, but these do not compensate for the entire lack of protection against the elements, and the motor cycle and sidecar combination has attained and maintained its market with its economy as its first attribute.

The recent considerable reductions in the price of cars and the introduction of many new small cars have put an entirely different complexion on the motor cycle and sidecar market, and it would appear that this vehicle, which was once the most economical and the most popular on our roads, will in a few months decrease and in a few years may become almost obsolete.

The New Ford Car.

IT is customary—almost a tradition, in fact—to smile when the name of the Ford car is mentioned, but it is given a smile of affection rather than of contempt. There are very few people nowadays who do not realise what a wonderful production the Ford car is—wonderful in its capabilites, and wonderful in the extent to which it has opened up the pleasures of motoring to a class which, without it, would never have been able to experience them. Commercially, also, and for the manifold purposes of an estate, the Ford has proved itself invaluable. And now comes the almost startling notification that, simultaneously with notable improvements in design, the price is to be dropped below its pre-war level. The improvements, apparently, lie mainly in the use of better material for the upholstery, the lowering of the seats to provide better protection and comfort for the passengers, and, incidentally, the additional safety of a lower centre of gravity; and the adoption of a right-hand driving position. The new price will be £120 for the four-seater, which compares with a pre-war figure—if our memory serves us—of £125. And the latter, it will be remembered, did not include dynamo lighting and electric starting.

The new Ford car is undoubtedly a factor to be reckoned with. It may not happen to fit the needs of the individual reader of these notes, for whom the British industry caters so excellently, and over so wide a range of models and prices, but the Ford has been, is, and will be a very considerable factor in the popularisation of motoring, and in the removal of the last irritating restrictions which still hamper the car user in general.

The Carriage of Spare Lamp Bulbs.

A SHORT time ago we published a complaint from a correspondent about the quality of lamp bulbs. For reasons that we do not understand there seems to be a plethora of faulty filaments which cannot stand the load to which they are subjected by the current and the vibration of the car. Until this wave of misfortune has passed the car owner must indulge in the simple remedy of carrying spare bulbs; but although the remedy is simple enough in principle it is none too simple in application, because spare lamp bulbs are things that need to be carefully housed.

Special interest and value are, therefore, attached to an accessory recently placed on the market by Messrs. G. T. Riches and Co., Limited, of 19, Store Street, W.C.1. This consists of a special carrier for lamp bulbs. Circular in shape and measuring only 5½ins. in diameter, this carrier contains compartments for five different-sized lamp bulbs, the interior of each compartment being suitably lined with cloth to house the bulbs in safety. It is a very excellent little "gadget" that takes up but little room in a car—it would easily go in the average door pocket, and it is likely soon to justify and perhaps repay its cost of 2s. 9d. There is, however, a word of caution necessary. Bulbs vary in size, and the sample of this carrier that has been sent to us will not accommodate many of the odd bulbs that we found lying about and which we tried in the carrier. This is a point on which the purchaser wants to satisfy himself by trying the bulbs with which his car is normally equipped in the carrier.

Making GOOD Brake Lining——BETTER

When Ferodo Bonded Asbestos has gone through the process of DIE-PRESSING—it has reached, as things stand at present, the highest point of usefulness.

DIE-PRESSING IS A PATENTED Ferodo process — an extra process — it produces the SUPER Brake Lining.

We are the only firm in the business who maintain a staff of engineers and chemists exclusively employed on research work, and we discovered that vertical pressure up to 1,000 tons on each piece of Ferodo Bonded Asbestos produced a dense mass, as hard as iron, which could not be compressed in use.

You never have to adjust the brake except to take up wear. Nothing can create brake confidence like FERODO DIE-PRESSING, and you can expect at least double the wear when you use Ferodo Die-pressed Brake Lining.

A SURVEY OF MILLINERY MODES

GILDED FEATHERS AND METAL TISSUES MAKE GAY HATS

WHEN in doubt buy a hat. Thus the modern plagairism of the old-time whist aphorism, and truly the possession of a new and smart chapeau has a quite exhilarating influence, especially during a midseason when dress is otherwise at rather a low ebb; though at such a moment a hat should not be too smart or extravagant, since that expression would cause it to stand out too conspicuously and, therefore, be out of harmony with the simple attire at present being worn. Milliners in this respect are always most obliging, and are the first to rise out of the vortex of the sales with fresh and alluring models. Naturally, many advance summer styles have gone south, notably a number of crinoline straws with clear brims of lace or finely pleated silver gauze, together with smaller shapes of black moiré on which great bows of reversible ribbon are posed. The tendency is to be rather grotesque with bows and long soft pheasant tail feathers, the latter frequently being gilded at the tips. They are used in profusion, and are quite liable to tumble over the edge of a brim and sweep the shoulders. This is a far wiser and more comfortable procedure than a shorter quill feather standing out at a dangerous side angle and altogether beyond the control of the wearer of the hat it adorns.

Nigger brown still remains a favourite nuance in the millinery world, for it is equally de rigueur worn with black or coloured costumes. Thus a small nigger brown satin shape trimmed with a drapery of lace that just covers the eyes and falls down at one or both sides in a soft cascade represents quite one of the most useful pieces of headgear; while toques of a like calibre are fashioned entirely of swathed marocain on close-fitting oblong shapes, a long end pulled through a knot at the right side to fall down well over the shoulders. It is veritably a test of an attractive face and a goodcomplexion to wear one of these swathed oblong turbans of black marocain with a piece suit or long coat of the same dull material and high collar of monkey fur; while yet another of the small-fitting hats to be seen has a soft crown and rolled up brim, and is built of black or nigger brown velvet, with, at one side, a large sprouting wing made of some composition, often iridescent or resembling tortoiseshell arranged like scales of a fish. And for wearing with dark-hued gowns there are many gay little chapeaux, to the service of which all manner of strange fabrics are culled, such as printed Eastern cottons, printed silks, foulards; in fact, any and every thing that runs to a riot of colour. A case in point was an Indian red silk, like surah, patterned over in black, yellow, beige and splashes of bright blue, bits of the design being picked out by tiny ruches of baby ribbon intermingled with long, narrow, coloured wood beads. Again, the gay chapeau may be some simple cloche shape—always so becoming to a young face—of red straw, the brim outlined by two close rows of cherries without foliage.

With larger brim hats much originality is wrought by imprévu twists, turns and slashes, these mostly tending to odd side effects, a treatment, however, that exacts a certain amount of deft handling to meet individual faces. But the latter-day milliner has made a study of profiles, and fully realises how varied these are and how each face has two distinct sides. Silk and tinsel ribbon, also shot lamé, play a conspicuous part in the millinery world, and are responsible, admittedly, for some of the most attractive and ultra-smart efforts that are especially in request for thés dansants.

Illustrated are two representative examples of what is being worn. The smaller model of nigger brown moiré has the brim rolled up with a tender shade of beige to match the reversible brown and beaver corded ribbon employed for the rather amazing exceedingly smart bow set at the apex of the crown. For the other, and decidedly picturesque, affair there are requisitioned black satin trimmed with a soft frill and lightly wired loops of silvered lace. This chapeau would look especially charming worn, as suggested, with white furs and a black frock.

The influence of the stage upon the modes of the moment is a debatable question. It is generally accepted, however, that for any modern staging of a play the leading dress exponents are invited to submit their latest and most cherished ideas; a piece of gratuitous advertisement, of which they are only too pleased to avail themselves. But one wonders whether it is merely the long arm of coincidence that has brought forth Gay's successful "Polly" at the right psychological moment to advance the revival of the at present tentatively hipped frocks. It is conceivable that almost every woman who goes to see the play will immediately figure to herself her own appearance in one of these long hipped skirts surmounted by the tight shapely bodice, for the ensemble is quite extraordinarily attractive, although with a certain demureness that is indescribable.

Seldom has there been seen such an adorable pink as that especially dyed for the frock worn by Polly, with its coquettish little green bows, about which all the dress-loving world is talking. Then there is surely a seductiveness the millinery world will find irresistible in those quaint and distractingly becoming lace caps worn under the sweet, small brim hats. "Polly," of a fact, will cast an unprecedented glamour over all of us who like to go beautifully clad.

MID-SEASON MILLINERY.

Small hat, of nigger brown moiré, with bow in beige and brown reversible ribbon, and an effective alliance of black satin and silvered lace.

The Architecture of Robert & James Adam
(1758-1794.)

By ARTHUR T. BOLTON, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A.

In two large folio volumes, containing about 700 superb illustrations, plans and drawings, £8 8 0 net.

THIS important work, which has been in preparation since 1913, forms a complete survey of the Architecture, Decoration and Furniture of the famous Adelphi Brethren, and constitutes a monumental record of the Adam style. Four generations have passed since the death of Robert Adam, yet his work has lost none of its attraction; and the esteem in which it is held to-day is even higher than at the zenith of his career. Although during the Greek and Gothic Revivals Adam architecture was freely destroyed, there still remains, as these volumes prove, a marvellous wealth of work, much of which is complete with the actual Furniture, Carpets and Hangings made to his designs. No country in the world can show equivalent instances of such historical preservation as are illustrated in these magnificent volumes.

A special prospectus of this work will be sent post free on application to the Manager, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, W.C. 2.

"Wetproof" Shotgun Cartridges

"WETPROOF" (Remington U.M.C.) is an advanced method of waterproofing a shell—exclusive and perfected. It comprises both the new scientific waterproofing compound and the method of application.

The "WETPROOF" compound of special oils is applied, not only to the body, but also to the top of the cartridge after loading, effectively sealing it against moisture and giving to the contents that protection which ensures uniformity of ignition, pattern, speed and penetration.

Sportsmen need not fear the effect of rain or damp weather on their shotgun cartridges if they use Remington U.M.C brands treated with the special "WETPROOF" process.

A Logical Aspect

In a leading article in the "Machine Tool Review" for Nov.-Dec. there appears the following important comments on methods of manufacture:

"Cost of manufacture is reduced by elimination of hand-work, which, in itself, offers no assurance of superior quality in the product. Good machine work will produce components which, in accuracy of form and size, are at least equal to those obtainable by the best hand-work. The wide-spread idea that hand-made watches, GUNS and other things are superior to the machine-made because they are made by hand, is a fallacy."

The B.S.A. Shot Gun is produced on highly efficient machinery from specially selected and tested materials, and combines all the essential features of a good gun, viz., correct functioning mechanism, beautiful lines, great strength, perfect balance, sweet crisp trigger pulls and fine pattern and penetration.

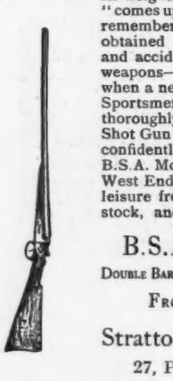
Old Guns —and New



MOST Sportsmen are loth to part with an old gun. They know just how it shoots; have grown familiar with its weight, balance and the way it "comes up to the bird"; and they remember too, many good bags obtained by its aid. But wear and accident are no respecters of weapons—and the time arrives when a new gun is imperative. To Sportsmen desiring a well-made, thoroughly tried and dependable Shot Gun at a reasonable price we confidently recommend one of the B.S.A. Models. In the heart of the West End you may choose at your leisure from our large and varied stock, and try the gun selected.

THE WELSH MATCH

KIPLING wrote of the English—

> Their psychology is bovine, their outlook crude and raw;
> They abandon vital matters to be tickled with a straw:
> But the straw that they were tickled with—the chaff that they were fed with—
> They convert into a weaver's beam to break their foeman's head with, and the fitness of the description was never better shown than when the Englishmen won their match at Twickenham last Saturday. A strong north wind blew down the ground and all through the first half of the game it teased and flouted the English team with every capricious trick known to the "North wind's malice." It tempted them to kick high and then blew the ball back over their heads, it twisted the passes out of their hands, it played odd freaks on the touch-line, it even seemed to have got inside the ball, which became possessed with the same devilish spirit—whenever an Englishman came near it.

But the wind and the vagaries of the ball played into the hands of the Welsh team. Their long kicks were carried safely into touch, the Englishmen's passes were delivered into their hands, they kept their opponents penned near their own goal and forced them to defend desperately for nearly forty minutes.

Then came half-time and the tables were turned. The difficulties they had experienced, the "chaff" they had been fed with became weapons of attack for the Englishmen; they made better use of their opportunities and, although they only scored once with a rather lucky drop-goal, they were no longer in danger of defeat.

There were many things to make this match remarkable and one that will not be forgotten easily. In the first place, there was a "record" crowd of spectators, many of whom stood in crowded railway carriages, then stood for three or four hours on the ground and, finally, travelled back to London in yet more crowded trains with a cheerful enthusiasm that says much for their devotion to the game. On this day also, C. N. Lowe played his twenty-second consecutive match for England—another "record"—and, as usual, saved his side from defeat on more than one occasion. Everyone would have liked to see Lowe score last Saturday, but he got few openings and—for once—could not rise superior to mere luck!

The drop-goal and solitary try scored by England were in themselves enough to make this match memorable; each was in its way remarkable and the combination of two such incidents in an International match was certainly unique. Smallwood's drop at goal was taken from just over the half-way line, a difficult and long shot at the best of times; he was surrounded by opponents, so that he was cramped in his movements, and, in addition, had just received a pass unorthodox enough to disconcert the most experienced player. The ball came to Corbett on the ground. He stooped to pick it up, but, realising that he would be "smothered" if he stood up, he shot the ball backwards between his legs in Smallwood's direction. There was a certain amount of luck necessary for such a pass to be accurate, but Smallwood managed to hold it and all was well. The try scored by H. L. Price was a fine individual effort and an excellent example of the supreme importance for a forward of fast "following-up." Wakefield started the match by kicking off against the wind. The ball hung in the air and Price, coming up very fast, reached it, by jumping, before any of the Welsh defenders could touch it. He took a quick drop at goal, but the ball rebounded from the goal-post and, again, he reached it before anyone else. Price crossed the line like a flash; England was three points ahead in less time than it takes to knock out a heavy-weight champion! This was the only occasion when the wind acted "without prejudice" to the home side during the first half of the match.

I do not agree with those who say the better team lost. Wales had everything in their favour for forty minutes and pressed England hard, but they could not put a finishing touch to their attack in spite of frequent opportunities. England was the better side and deserved to win because the golden chance was seized when it came.

Twenty years ago, in an article on Rugby football, I wrote "One of the complaints most often heard from old players is that the art of drop-kicking is fast dying out and—sad to say—it is true." Everyone who went to Twickenham will agree that there is very little danger of such a thing happening to-day, for the drop kick is very much to the fore. In spite of the wind, which varied in force every minute, there were some very good attempts to drop goals on both sides. J. Rees, the Welsh full-back, hit the post with a shot from a difficult angle near the touch-line. W. J. A. Davies also was nearly successful, but, with players such as these two, that is only to be expected. There was, however, quite an epidemic of dropping at goal, and several forwards, as well as backs, tried their luck at it. Since G. D. Roberts retired, there has been no forward who was his equal, either in length or in accuracy.

The chief credit for England's victory must be given to the forwards, who were splendid in the loose play. Wakefield, Price, Luddington and Conway were at the top of their form. Voyce was as effective as usual and gave away no free kicks. Edwards and Gardner worked tremendously hard and Cove-Smith played his customary forceful game. The Welsh forwards were better "hookers" than their opponents and generally got the ball in the tight scrummages. In the open play, Thomas, Michael and Parker were the most conspicuous. Kershaw and Davies have played better games, but they were too good for Delahay and Clem Lewis, who were both inclined to put their own interpretation on the off-side laws. Of the three-quarters, Myers made fewest mistakes and his defence was impregnable. Lowe was better than Smallwood, but neither got many chances of scoring. Corbett appeared to suffer from a prolonged "latent period," which he short-circuited fortunately in time to give Smallwood that wonderful pass. On the other side, Harding made a promising debut, but is not another Teddy Morgan—yet. Johnson was more spectacular than effective and the two centres were only moderate. As a whole, neither back division was up to the usual International standard—though the weather conditions were partly to blame for this. Rees was better than Gilbert, but they both made mistakes and the Englishman failed to find touch with some of his kicks. It was a thrilling match to watch, but not good football.

LEONARD R. TOSSWILL.

THE EGYPTIAN BOAT OF THE SUN

PORCELAIN. PICTURES AND BOOKS.

THE romance of the finding of the tomb of Tutankhamen grows with each fresh announcement of artistic and historical treasures brought to the light of day. Many questions on the art of Egypt may be answered: many theories may be discredited or confirmed. How far did the art of Tel-el-Amarna influence that of the objects in the tomb of Tutankhamen, and what apart did the religion of the Disc-Worshippers play in its development?

Of its nature we may learn more definitely from the new discoveries. It was introduced (if it was not a revival) into Egypt by the queen of Amenhotep III, who persuaded the king to allow her to practise it, one of the rites being the procession of the Boat of the Sun. It was believed that when the sun touched the western waves the Dwellers in the Underworld rejoiced and caught it by the prow to lead it to their dark caverns. Again, when a man died and was judged, if he was found just and without evil he went to the Isles of the Blessed, and to reach them he had to be borne by the hawk or the ferryman of the Boat of the Sun. It was the use and wont of the Egyptians to supply the deceased with means of transport to reach the blessed shores, so model boats are found in the tombs, such as the specimen here reproduced by courtesy of Messrs. Spink. It is of wood, carved and painted, and is of much earlier date (twelfth dynasty, i.e., 2,000 to 1788 B.C.) than the tomb of Tutankhamen, but something of the same may be found.

The worship of the solar disc was further developed by Queen Iaia, consort of Amenhotep III, after his death. She was a fair woman with blue eyes, possibly Arabian or Syrian, a worshipper of one god, and she persuaded her son Amenhotep to renounce the many gods of Egypt. Finding no support in the old cities, he withdrew to Tel-el-Amarna, where he established the new religion and a new art, changing his name to Akhenaten. His successor, Tutankhamen, had, apparently, developed the art to perfection. The religion lasted but a short period: the ancient gods returned.

From another property come a pair of Chinese kylins in famille verte with a young kylin and brocaded ball, enamelled in green, yellow and aubergine. The oblong pedestals are decorated with trelliswork, butterflies and flowers, in green on a yellow ground. In famille verte, too, is the figure of an Immortal with a gourd; cranes are enamelled on a black and yellow ground on his robe, while the pedestal is decorated with prunus blossom and trelliswork.

On February 1st Messrs. Christie will sell bronzes, the property of Sir John G. Tharold, Bart., and decorative furniture from other sources. In the first property are included a group of Apollo and Daphne, with another in which they are accompanied by Cupids, the latter being 22ins. high; Hercules and Omphale; a lion attacking a horse; a group of Laocoon, 36ins. high; a pair having for subjects two of the Labours of Hercules; the figure of an Egyptian lion and a life-size bust of Sir Walter Scott. With these there is a square walnut table with a large silver plaque in the top, engraved within an oval panel with Venus and Minerva, in borders of arabesque foliage. The framework is overlaid with tortoiseshell and inlaid with arabesques of silver. The other furniture includes a Louis XV oval marqueterie table, with drawers and shelf, inlaid with landscapes, architecture and a figure in stained green harewood on satinwood, the top being a veined white marble slab with ormolu borders; a suite of gilt furniture, carved with foliage, upholstered in Aubusson tapestry woven with subjects after Boucher, sphinxes, birds and flowers in pink borders, there being a settee and four fauteuils; a show cabinet by William Kent; a bracket clock by Thomas Tompion, its brass dial chased with cherubs; a Flemish tapestry panel with a group of musicians in landscape background and garlands of flowers in the brown border; and an Aubusson tapestry with a bird in landscape and borders of flowers on a brown ground.

For two days, beginning on January 31st, Messrs. Sotheby will dispose of old and modern drawings and pictures belonging to various owners and including drawings by Claude Lorrain; the "Adoration of the Shepherds," in bistre, pen and wash of the Venetian school attributed to Titian pastels by Rosalba; drawings of the Vernon family by Daniel Gardner, among which is a fine pastel of the Hon. Martha V. Vernon in figured muslin dress; two drawings in red chalk by Boucher, one of a young girl standing by a paling, the other probably of an actor with hat in left hand. There are water-colours by Rowlandson, the most notable being "Loading Naval Stores at Portsmouth." On the second day the oil paintings come up, including: "The Poultry Yard," by Murillo—in which the central figure is a turkey, round which are a duck and ducklings, rabbits, chickens and a guinea-pig, with eggs in a nest on the right—is well known through exhibition and illustration. By Hans Muelich is a portrait of a man unknown, though his coat of arms is there with the date 1556, the letters C. T. on his signet ring and the inscription AETATIS SVAEXL. Unknown also and more interesting still is the portrait of an English gentleman with grizzled beard and moustache. He wears a black flat cap and fur-lined gown of the same colour with gold buttons, the background being bright green. By Holbein, there is something about it that recalls the character of Henry VIII, as the same painter portrayed it. It is in violent contrast to the portrait, by H. Rigaud, of James Edward Stuart, the Chevalier de Saint Georges, in whose eyes is a little of the melancholy of those of Charles I.

Some most important books and manuscripts will pass under the hammer at Messrs. Sotheby's on February 5th and two ensuing days. Full of interest are the early Welsh manuscripts, especially that of poetry of the eleventh and twelfth centuries on vellum, by late fourteenth and early fifteenth century scribes, apparently the original authority for the poems it contains and differing slightly from the printed version known. There is also a copy of the extremely rare first edition of the Bible in Welsh, printed in 1588, while considerable interest attaches to a psalter of about 1520, which contains on the last leaf a rhymed inscription apparently in the handwriting of Queen Elizabeth. While dealing with ecclesiastical subjects we may note the Martin Marprelate tracts (some of which are extremely rare), printed about 1588–89, and those by Penri or Penry, of one of which only a few copies are known. Of rare books there are some in a small collection in fine bindings from the library of Charles Henry, Count Hoym of Poland, such as "L'Histoire des Favorites"; "The Present State of New England with Respect to the Indian War," bound with several other tracts, 1673; "The Compleat Angler," 1661, being the first edition with the Laws of Angling and Table of Contents; Bellay's "Hymne au Roy" (Paris, 1558), a unique trial proof copy; a collection of very rare publications by R. L. Stevenson, and such books as Ben Jonson's Works, 1616–41, and Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," 1766. There are fine works with coloured plates, productions of modern private presses, a collection of George Borrow's works, fine bindings and a remarkable volume of early manuscript maps of the West Coast of America. One of the features of the sale is Lady Dilke's "French Engravers and Draughtsmen of the Eighteenth Century" (150 copies printed), with nearly 10,000 extra illustrations with printed titles supplied, and sumptuously bound in fifty-eight volumes.

Pictures by Old Masters, the property of the Lady Charnwood, of H. F. Frampton of Moreton House, Dorset, and of the late Percy B. Dobson will be sold by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson on February 14th. On March 8th and 9th they will disperse the collection of Chinese armorial porcelain formed by the late Mr. F. A. Crisp.

In their sale of old pictures on January 18th Messrs. Robinson, Fisher and Harding obtained for "A woodland scene with buildings and figures," signed with the initials of and by M. Hobbema, £52 10s. (Spiller).

ENGLISH HOMES IN THE XVIIIth CENTURY

English Decoration and Furniture of the Later XVIIIth Century, by M. Jourdain. (Batsford, £3 3s.)

MISS JOURDAIN'S diligently collected materials and aptly selected illustrations for her very acceptable volume on English decoration and furniture in the classic style, or shall we say styles, that prevailed during George III's protracted reign are prefaced with a "foreword" by Professor A. E. Richardson, which is made interesting by the vigour of his views and the definiteness of his opinions. He sketches the architectural history and ethics of this active period. It opens at the moment when—art and architecture having long been prominent in the educational curriculum of our Whig oligarchy—le bon gout, in which Voltaire found Shakespeare to be sadly deficient, was reaching its amplest fruition in this country; when the young noble toured and collected in Italy and France; when English artists and architects sojourned in Rome; when, at home, the Dilettanti Society ruled taste, its more serious members, like Townley and Payne Knight, collecting classic objects, while those of lighter vein prattled of the "Grecian gusto" that the return to England of "Athenian" Stuart had brought into vogue. Thus was prepared a fertile field for the exercise of the genius and capacities of Robert Adam among architects, of John Flaxman among sculptors, of Josiah Wedgwood among manufacturers. The result is neatly phrased by Professor Richardson, who tells us:

> When the works of this period are subjected to critical analysis, either collectively or individually, the family likeness and stamp of good taste upon all is the most distinctive mark. The wealthy could afford scale, which implies studied decoration; the small gentry were pleased with rooms proportioned to suit their means, and were content with less ornament; while tradespeople imitated those in the station immediately above them. Simple design, truthful and consistent with the impelling forces that gave it life, if it lost in some measure the masculine power of the earlier work, gained as a recompense in refinement, and the year 1790 can be regarded as the culminating point of the years of good taste.

The French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars followed. Isolation from the Continent, itself in a state of upheaval, and absorption of the nation's mind in the problem of survival gradually undermined the Temple of Art.

> The standard of taste, which had reached the tidal mark of refinement between the years 1790–1800 fluctuated between a coarse imitation of French Empire and an Anglicised version of Athenian Stuart reduced, let it be understood, to the terms of the strait waistcoat.

There may be a very general agreement with the Professor's conclusions, but hardly with his estimate of the personal causes of the decline. "Henry Holland died in 1806," says the Professor, as if to imply that thereupon the English architectural world collapsed! To this favourite architect of the Prince Regent and his set he assigns the very apex of "the culminating point of the years of good taste." He is the leading master of decoration. He invents a style, he is of "exquisite taste." On the other hand, the Adam Brothers are "ultra-refined." Sir William Chambers has "respect for the French modes and a scholarly knowledge of Roman fragments." James Wyatt merely "gained royal patronage"; while poor Sir John Soane "produced a series of interior designs which are marred by brutality; and by striving after originality he produced work of a freakish aspect." Yet many of us glance away from the quite correct but wholly uninspired mass of Brook's Club, and on to the distinctly individual and engaging front of Boodle's on the opposite side of the street; and we may prefer even Soane's Bank of England to the commonplace expanse of white brick which the architect "of consummate skill" imposed upon the erstwhile warm and living exteriors of Althorp and Broadlands. No doubt, had Carlton House survived and remained as Henry Holland left it, we should have valued it as one of the outstanding interiors of its time. And the Broadlands rooms fully show that generic good taste with individualistic shades that we also find in the work of Leverton in Bedford Square and at Woodhall Park. Henry Holland has a right to be brought forth from the oblivion into which he fell, but, surely, his proper atmosphere is daylight, rather than limelight. Certainly there is nothing that gives him the star place in the little of his work that Miss Jourdain illustrates. The reproductions of the aquatints of Carlton House and the illustrations of two rooms at Southill do not tend to throw into the shade the classic work of James Wyatt at Hermingham and at Heaton Park, and still less that of Robert Adam at Syon and Osterley at the Nos. 20 of Portman and St. James's Squares, which are among his interiors that are exceedingly well rendered in the illustrations.

But Miss Jourdain's task is by no means ended—is, indeed, only well under way—when she has finished her review of the architects' domain. She has much to tell us of the artists and craftsmen who interpreted and fulfilled the architects' designs and intentions. Sculptors were not more engaged in creating, on their own initiative, single and independent statues than in co-operating with the architect in the production of architectural compositions. Robert Adam and his fellows, for their chimneypieces and other highly carved and enriched details, employed Italian sculptors like Carlini and Locatelli, but still more Englishmen such as Wilson and Bacon, Deare and Flaxman. Painters had like scope—no longer indeed in painting whole ceilings and walls with gods and goddesses, but in filling in the modest-sized panels that formed part of the elaborate plasterwork schemes of Adam, Chambers and Wyatt. In this field foreigners held undisputed sway, for Cipriani and Bonomi, Zucchi and Angelica Kauffmann had no native competitors of mark. Plaster work and plaster workers have their chapter, as also such fittings as were of metal and other materials. The section on the "Lighting of Rooms" is quite well done and most welcome, while furniture—its materials, its forms and its changes—is brought well before us by the careful co-ordination of letterpress and illustration. The survey is rapid but not superficial. Enough is said to give the reader a correct general view of the period and much interesting knowledge of its details. The volume is well imagined, well constructed, well presented.

THE 15.9 H.P. RENAULT WITH FOUR WHEEL BRAKES

FAMOUS since 1898, as they say, and truthfully say, in the advertisements, it is only natural that Renault cars are regarded with something approximating to affectionate esteem in the minds of motorists. The Renault was one of those French cars that did so much towards pioneering the motoring movement when pioneering was the real thing and was conducted against and through obstacles that would have quelled the zeal of many a pioneer in other fields. Just when the first Renault car left the factory I am afraid I cannot say, but it is beyond the pale of speculation that in the days when the British motor industry consisted of not more than half a dozen firms, nearly all resting on very shaky foundations, Renaults were not only established, but were busily engaged at Billancourt. It was not long after the establishment of the Renault factories that some of the cars found their way into England, and some of us can remember the time when a Renault was one of the very few cars that could be purchased for use and not merely as a plaything.

These cars have been characterised by a feature of external construction which exercises an influence on their appearance that, it may be admitted at once, has considerably militated against their recent popularity on the British market. The positioning of the radiator behind the engine is one of those many things about which much may be said both pro and con. The most important "con" in my opinion is the question of appearance, which, after all, is largely a matter of personal taste and preference. The most important "pro" is that the engine is given an ease of access that is unobtainable by other means. To-day, perhaps, this "pro" is not so important as it used to be, for the value of accessibility is being realised by all designers, and engines behind radiators and under conventional bonnets now frequently give scope for little complaint in this respect. But it may be urged that it was the once unusual accessibility obtainable with the Renault design that prompted other makers to adopt it, and that has quite possibly exercised a considerable influence in improving the accessibility of power units more conventionally disposed.

Whatever may be said against the appearance of the ordinary method of placing the engine in front of the radiator with a sloping bonnet to cover the power unit, these objections surely do not apply to the latest type Sports Renault, the 15.9 h.p. example of which forms the subject of this note. Instead of being narrow and leaving abruptly terminated body lines, the bonnet of this new model is widened at its rear and pointed in the front, so that a perfectly smooth lateral line is obtained from the front of the car to the rear. Sensible and clever tapering of the bonnet has had the further effect of giving the car a highly sporting appearance which, while it was in my hands, was admired by all who saw it. This model Renault is one of those cars that everybody turns round to look at on the road, and there is not a little satisfaction to be derived by the owner in the possession of such a vehicle.

This car is one of those of which the chief interest and appeal are all wrapped up in its road performances, its specification may, therefore, be very briefly summarised. The engine is a four-cylinder monobloc, having a bore and stroke of 80mm. by 140mm., more or less conventional in its lay-out, except that such units as electric dynamotor (combined dynamo and starting motor) and magneto are placed at the forward end of the engine in a fashion which, mainly on account of the radiator position, gives remarkable accessibility. The carburettor is on the near side, as also is the induction manifold, which is well water-jacketed as well as being bolted close up to the exhaust; but the accessibility of the carburettor is merely ordinary. Fuel is fed to it on the vacuum principle from a main tank at the rear of the chassis, and the vacuum tank is housed in a compartment in the scuttle dash just behind the radiator filler, and having a lid which may be seen in some of the illustrations just forward of the windscreen. Through this lid the tank may, if necessary, be removed bodily for any attention, so that although it is normally out of sight and out of mind,

A forward view of the Renault engine illustrating particularly the accessible positions of magneto, starting motor and oil filler; this latter being just to the right of the electric horn. The illustration also shows the operating mechanism of one of the front wheel brakes and the switch by means of which the starting motor may be operated from the front of the car.

Interesting Renault features shown in this view are the unusual horizontal handle to the hand brake and the compartments in the valances in which the tools are accommodated in separate drawers.

it is actually quite as accessible as one placed in the conventional position under the bonnet. Connected with the vacuum tank is the very useful and ingenious possession of a fuel tap on the instrument board, so that the fuel may be turned on and off by the driver from his seat at the wheel.

The gear-box gives four speeds and reverse with right-hand control, and a very remarkable gear-box it is; for, as soon as one has mastered the unusual and very welcome rapid change up, changing either up or down (the latter, of course, with double declutching) is extremely easy, and one of the many praiseworthy features of Renault road performance is connected directly with its gear-box. I have heard it said that with many cars it is impossible to tell from the transmission noise whether the car is travelling at any given moment on top or on an indirect ratio; but the Renault is the only car with a conventional gear-box of which I can actually certify this to be the case by personal experience. Nevertheless, there is a gear-box feature that I consider leaves room for criticism, and this is that the reverse is obtained

Sir Charles Friswell, writing of his Lanchester "Forty," says :

"Now that I have had my 40 h.p. Lanchester for nearly two years, and having covered over 17,000 miles under the most trying conditions (driving in London and up and down the Surrey Hills, to boot), I am pleased to tell you that I have never had an involuntary stop and my machine has not cost me one halfpenny for repairs.

"I would further say it seems to improve with wear, and that I am well content with my choice. Only those who have driven the 'Lanchester' can appreciate 'the supreme achievement in modern automobile engineering.'

by depressing the knob on the gear lever and going right through first gear position. When manœuvring a car in a confined space this is useful, because only a direct and very short backward and forward motion of the gear lever is required; but when changing down from second to first on the road care is necessary to avoid going right through first and touching the reverse pinion. This is one of those little details that probably would not worry anyone who was thoroughly accustomed to driving this car and no other, but it is a thing to which a new driver must accustom himself.

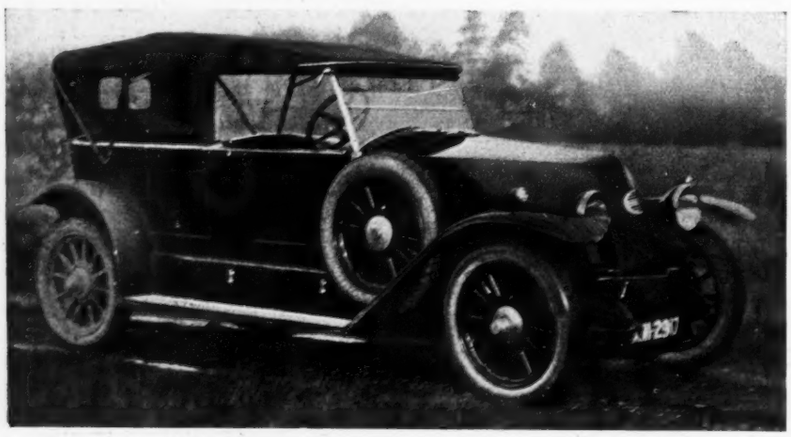
Suspension is by semi-elliptics in front and by oblique cantilevers in the rear and, like most other modern suspension systems on cars of this class, is thoroughly satisfactory. The tyre size is 820mm. by 120 mm., and the other essential measurements are a ground clearance of 9½ins., a track of 4ft. 9ins., a wheel-base of 10ft. 6ins., and a chassis weight of 24½cwt.

FOUR WHEEL BRAKES.

The one feature of this chassis specification that puts it in a class by itself among cars of similar price and horse-power rating (the chassis price is £680, the complete car £820) is its braking lay-out. The hand brake operates on the rear wheels and is one of the most powerful hand brakes that I have handled; but all the surprise and wonder at the braking system of the car may be devoted to the four wheel brakes operated by the foot pedal. We are hearing a great deal about four wheel brakes and how all cars with any pretence to high performance will have them sooner or later. The Renault is the first car so equipped that I have driven for any distance, and so, perhaps, the novelty of the experience may be mentioned as partially, but only partially, explaining my enthusiasm. Driving a car with four wheel brakes is an experience that, once enjoyed, immediately spoils the driver for any other car. As a friend whom I took out said to me, "I consider a car like this an extremely dangerous vehicle for anyone to be allowed to drive." Considering that four wheel brakes give a degree of safety that is unobtainable by any other known means, this remark deserves the brief explanation that it arose from a previous comment that, owing to the liberties that one may take, and one does take, with a car so equipped, one is apt when at the wheel of another car to forget its limitations if it has only brakes operating through the rear wheels, and disaster may very easily result.

During the whole of the time that the Renault was in my hands the weather was as bad as it could be—or one might say as good as it could be for the testing of four wheel brakes. It rained every day, but not continuously, so that the roads were generally in their very worst sticky and greasy condition. They offered a perfect surface for skidding the car round completely in a 15ft. circle; and just to demonstrate that the Renault could be so turned I achieved it by judicious use of the hand brake, to the annoyed surprise of the Covent Gardeners. Not the least of the many attractions of four wheel brakes is that an ordinary skid may be checked in part, at least, by their judicious use. Normally, of course, the application of rear wheel brakes during the progress of a skid is offering an invitation to Dame Disaster that she very seldom refuses to accept; but the application of a four wheel braking pedal during the progress of a skid has a very welcome effect in checking it. But, when all is said and done, this is only an incidental charm of this braking system; its main asset lies in the way in which one may apply the brakes indiscriminately both as regards road conditions, speed and everything else, just as fancy dictates.

On the greasiest of wood pavements the car could be reduced from 25 m.p.h. to zero in what seemed like considerably less than 20yds. of distance, although I did not actually measure it. On an ordinary road with a surface giving good adhesion the effect was so remarkable that I will not attempt to describe it for the fear of incurring a charge of gross exaggeration.



The Renault retains its graceful appearance when the hood is up, an attribute partially due to its sloping windscreen.

Let it be said and understood, however, that no one samples four wheel brakes for the first time without having his hair raised and without subsequently deciding that four wheel brakes are really essential for every car that has any claim to "class" and distinction. Irrespective of the conditions under which the brakes are applied, the car maintains an absolutely straight line and comes to a standstill without the slightest deviation from the path it was following.

On the Renault the lay-out of these brakes is somewhat unusual in that all four are applied simultaneously through an adequate compensating mechanism. More commonly the rear wheel brakes are given a slight lead over the front, but my admittedly somewhat limited experience certainly seemed to provide adequate evidence that the Renault arrangement would take a lot of beating. It is unfortunate that English designers maintain that front wheel brakes cannot, in the light of our present knowledge of front axle construction, be applied with a certainty of a long and satisfactory working life. I am, of course, not in a position to pass any comment on the durability and prolonged efficiency of Renault brakes, but, superficially at any rate, it would appear that the designer has overcome all difficulty of adjustment and has made the system as far as possible fool-proof. The danger with four wheel brakes is that one of the front might be given a lead over the other, or both might be given a lead over the back. With the Renault this possibility would appear to be non-existent.

ON THE ROAD.

Much of the foregoing anticipates what would normally be said under an account of the road performance of a car. There remains, however, the necessity for comment on the capacity of the engine, on the quality of the steering and on the general controllability of the car. As regards the first, the Renault power unit may be described as a thoroughly good representative of its class which, without being extraordinary in any single particular, is rather above the average in the matter of performance. I am relying entirely on my own experience in giving this comment on the engine capacity when I say that the maximum speed obtainable from the car was 54 m.p.h. I ought, however, to say that the makers claim that 60 m.p.h. is readily attainable under favourable conditions, and to add that such conditions did not arise during the time that I had the car in my hands, for wherever I encountered a straight stretch of road there was always a gale of wind directly opposed to the car, or there was other traffic which made a real speed burst of adequate and satisfactory length quite unthinkable.

As for the style of the engine, this is distinctly high class, for its flexibility deserves to be characterised as unusually good, even though there are so many cars of the Renault horse-power rating which have notably flexible engines. I took a six-cylinder enthusiast out in the Renault for a short spin, and his comment was that the flexibility of the engine and its get-away on top gear were quite extraordinary. I would not go so far as to characterise it as unique, but it is certainly distinctly creditable. The engine is also very lively, and its acceleration above 40 m.p.h. up to about 50 m.p.h. is distinctly meritorious. Except within quite narrow and clearly defined limits, the engine runs very smoothly, and the only noise noticeable was the full-throated boom of a healthy exhaust. At about 21–23 m.p.h. on top gear there was a distinct period, which made its presence felt chiefly by vibration of the aluminium cover of the facia board. When on indirect ratios the engine was turning over at about the same speed as it turns over on top at about 21 m.p.h.—a speed that I regret I cannot give definitely in the absence of knowledge of the gear ratios. This vibration period caused the instrument-board to become distinctly noisy and to encourage the false impression that the whole riding of the car was rough. As soon as this critical point was passed, or before it was reached, the smoothness left little to be desired.

In the matter of hill climbing the car was not quite up to the standard of some others of the same class that I have recently sampled, although it would be absurd to suggest that any ordinary main road hill is likely to be beyond the capacity of the car. The Mount at Guildford, which I find is usually climbable from a standing start by most four-speed cars on second gear, called for first speed before the Renault could make a clean get-away. As soon as the steepest portion, which is at the beginning of the hill, was crested, the engine took second and mastered the climb quite easily; neither when first or second gear was engaged was it necessary to exert the engine to the utmost of its capacity, so long as bottom had been used for the first fifty or, perhaps, a hundred yards of the climb.

The road holding and the general controllability are of a very high order indeed. The suspension is adequately flexible without being soft, and the oblique disposition of the rear cantilever springs, which only just fail to meet at a point in the centre of the chassis, proves a very effective counter against roll. The steering is light and easy; and that aspect of controllability and that sense of security due to the possession of adequate brakes have already been sufficiently touched upon.

The Renault is unquestionably one of those cars that one can recommend without hesitation to a critical purchaser. Its engine performance may not be extraordinarily high, but, as compensations, one has a gear-box that is perfectly silent under whatever conditions it is being used, a four wheel braking system of which brief experience, at least, indicates it to be very near to perfection, a robustness of chassis construction that is beyond question, and, finally, a reputation that is second to none. I am informed that the Renault works at Billancourt employ no fewer than 18,000 hands and are at present very busily engaged, while a firm that has been in successful existence for some twenty-five years is not likely to let down its customers.

Eliminating the Personal Factor in Clutch Operation.

IN order to eliminate as far as possible the personal element in clutch operation, Mr. Collins of the L.G.O.C.'s Repair Works at Chiswick has invented a hydraulic buffer for the clutch pedal, and this, we understand, will in due course be fitted to all London 'buses. As may be gathered from its name, the buffer consists of a brass cylinder filled with oil and containing a piston, the rod of which is suitably connected to the clutch pedal. While the clutch pedal is being depressed by the driver's foot the piston is free to move without resistance through the oil that fills the cylinder, but when the pedal is released, as a result of the closing of a loose non-return valve in the piston, this latter can only move through the cylinder by displacing the oil in it. This displacement takes place through a small valve of which the effective aperture is adjustable. Thus the rate of movement of the piston is controlled by the size of this aperture, and whatever the size may be, the rate of movement is always steady and progressive. It is quite a simple matter to set the escape valve for the oil so that the rate of movement of the piston is the same as the ideal return rate for the clutch pedal. Thus, whether the driver lets in the clutch gently by gradually relieving the pressure of his foot, or whether he jerks his foot off the pedal, makes very little difference, because in the latter event the piston working against its oil resistance ensures a gentle return for the pedal and so smooth engagement for the clutch.

Recently, by the courtesy of Mr. Geo. Shave, Chief Engineer of the L.G.O.C., and of Mr. Owen Watson, the Experimental Engineer at Chiswick, we had the privilege of inspecting this device and of driving for a short distance two omnibuses, one fitted with it and one without. The clutch that was not fitted with this control we found much the same as an ordinary motor car clutch, except that its springs were, naturally, stronger, and more pressure was required for its operation. Accelerating the engine with one foot through the accelerator pedal and releasing the clutch with the left foot, a smooth start away from rest was easily obtained, but it was immediately apparent how very natural it would be for a man working such a clutch thousands of times a day to fall below the necessary standard in getting away from rest. On the other 'bus, if one ignored for a moment the presence of the hydraulic control, one could operate the clutch and accelerator pedal jointly in the ordinary way and apparently the buffer had no effect, but one could also do something very striking—depressing the clutch, inserting the gear and accelerating the engine up to a quite high speed, one could slip one's foot off the clutch pedal without releasing the accelerator pedal at all, and the get-away would be every bit as smooth and as progressive as if the clutch had been most carefully and gently released by a gradual relaxation of foot pressure.

Whether this hydraulic buffer has any sphere of utility in application to private cars is largely a matter of opinion. That of its inventor appears to be that it has not. For ourselves, we are in agreement with him as regards cars with satisfactory clutches and in the hands of capable drivers; but some cars have clutches that are not satisfactory and some drivers are anything but capable. This combination would certainly justify the fitting of the hydraulic buffer, which, some 10ins. in overall length for a 'bus, would, presumably, be smaller if made for a private car. For commercial goods-carrying vehicles, of which the greater part of the running is done in heavy traffic, the buffer should be a very useful fitting; but it has been introduced primarily for heavy passenger-carrying vehicles, and for such it is unquestionably a very praiseworthy innovation, ensuring as it does not merely added comfort to the passengers, but longer life for the transmission and tyres.

Air Mail Developments.—Important developments in commercial flying are in progress in several of the British Colonies. In South Africa it is proposed to establish an air service for passengers and mails between Capetown and Johannesburg, calling at Bloemfontein en route. Subsidiary services to Pretoria and Durban are also contemplated. The Government of South Africa will support these routes. In New Zealand a regular service for goods and passengers is proposed between Gisburn and Auckland; and in Australia four air mail routes have been authorised with Government support. In all cases British-built aeroplanes with Rolls-Royce aero engines will be used exclusively.

VAUXHALL

This season's Vauxhalls are of outstanding interest

THE road performance given by the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall places it among the great cars of the world. Yet its chassis price is but £695, and its annual tax only £23. The engine is a new design in which use is made of the Lanchester harmonic balancer and other devices that ensure the highest quality of functioning. Users of high-powered cars should not fail to inform themselves of the advantages which they can obtain in the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall.

IN the 14 h.p. Vauxhall a sweet-running car of wonderful flexibility is offered to the owner-driver at the low price of £595 for the complete four-seater car, with a particularly roomy body of Vauxhall grade. The running cost is low. A petrol consumption of 30 m.p.g. is frequently obtained. ¶ A wide range of bodies is available for both types of chassis. Allow us to send you full particulars and to make an appointment for a trial drive.

SIMPLICITY EXTRAVAGANTLY EXPRESSED

EARLY SPRING COATS AND SKIRTS.

THE dress world at the moment appears to be divided into two camps—anyway, so far as day attire is concerned. These are tailor-mades of ultra-severe character and the three-piece suit. The first is to be seen expressed in every variety of fancy checked and striped tweed, and those useful gentlemen's suitings; and the latter in face and rep cloths, kasha and gabardines.

With the tailor-mades the simplest little pull-on felt hats are worn, accompanied by low-heel instep strap shoes of brown calf or crocodile, speckled lisle stockings and, more often than not, mannish shirts of tucked lawn or crêpe de Chine—almost a country outfit, though one, under the changed conditions of things, that stands as the insignia of the really well dressed during the mid-season in town. The three-piece suits are more dressy, rather by virtue of material and touches of embroidery or braiding than anything elaborate in the way of actual expression. For the edict has gone forth, from those who must be obeyed, that simple ligne is to be the order for both day and evening; in fact, it may be said that at least two-thirds of the costly simplicity that is to prevail will rest on richness of materials and the remainder on touch and interpretation accorded by the fingers of genius. For, be the suit of tweed, kasha, blistered satin or rajah cloth, and the gowns of chiffon velvet, faille brocade or Georgette encrusted with beads, the same quiet, simple silhouette will be observed; and this is already being made manifest in the advance models now beginning to put in an appearance.

There is a tentative attempt to raise the so-called waist-line, which has for so long rested on or near the hips. One well known Parisian couturière is trying to introduce with her slim hip waist a second line under the arms. One wonders what will be the upshot of this. But with the exception of the picturesque bouffant frocks, solely exploited in the evenings, so far, the normal waist seems as far off as ever, and it is likely to remain in abeyance so long as we adhere to long classical draperies.

Where, however, a distinct and notable change is being wrought is in the drawing of the draperies toward the front. A snuff-coloured marocain fashioned after this manner was closely strained round the back and over the hips, to fall in dipping godet folds down the centre of the front. Round the waist, perhaps a trifle higher than has been the case of late, there was twisted a coloured silk sash in bandana colourings, the short ends of which were tied in a soft bow, also in front.

A propos of these gay sashes, many are figuring on the modish short coats, threaded through wide slots. They should prove an attractive feature on white summer sports frocks and costumes.

It is rumoured—and one can but give credence to the report—that brown, as a colour, is on the wane; confirmation being found in the favour accorded green in pale, vivid and sombre hues, also a tawny orange and cyclamen. Considerable stress is laid on the number of white creations that have gone south this season; but it is doubtful if the move will have much, if indeed any, influence on our summer attire. We shall wear white—we always do—but our climate, alas! lacks the elements to render the ephemeral frock worn on the Riviera suitable for other than especial occasions here. There is, however, an unquestionable allure in the promise of organdies embroidered with sprigs of flowers, and also in the intimation that much lace is likely to be worn.

Gowns of beige, grey and even chestnut-coloured lace can be made supremely charming, and a novelty in connection with these is the introduction of chiffon velvet. A model seen of beige lace boasted a back panel and sash of brown chiffon velvet, the long straight corsage of the dentelle resolving into wide square sleeves, caught to the arm from the elbows to the wrist.

THE VOGUE OF THE PEASANT COAT.
Early spring costume of olive green face cloth, trimmed with moleskin fur and bands of grey suède.

Silvered coloured lace is responsible for some of the most attractive dance dresses, and represents a fancy capable of considerable development. Lily of the valley green, pale mauve, delphinium blue and cyclamen are among the most convincing nuances for this glistening metal thread treatment, the frocks being arranged with softly draped and very long skirts and long slim bodices shaped into a V back and front, the sole decorative note imparted by something rather amazing and distinctive in floral sprays, an ostrich feather garniture or a great ribbon chou, with an avalanche of long narrow streamers.

Then, in direct contrast to this silvered lace, comes moiré, an old-time silken fabric that has been quietly but insidiously working its way to the front for some time, and which at long last has every appearance of establishing itself, mostly in delicate tints or full shades of rose, yellow and old blue. A straight slender slip of a gown of white moiré had the shallow folds or draperies at the left side lined with pistache green Georgette and caught beneath a mammoth green silk rose with black leaves. Needless to say, the new moiré is not of the stiff outstanding quality of yore, but is as soft and as pliable as chiffon velvet and crêpe de Chine; and it comes, moreover, as a welcome change from both these latter, which have done yeoman service.

The short, loose, peasant type of coat, a style prevalent in many countries, has firmly established itself in the realms of costumes. It is essentially what has come to be known as the dressmaker's tailor-made, the modiste being quite as adept in its fashioning as the man tailor, since this jacket is a dégagé affair, the fronts whereof, after closing right up at the throat, fly open to show a blouse, jumper or the embroidered front of an all-in-one frock.

Narrow lines of fur are likely to form a decorative feature well on into the spring, allied with embroidery, braiding, lines or appliqué of suède, all of which go to render these coats rather dressy little models, their elaboration being thrown up into stronger relief by absolutely plain straight skirts—a criticism that will be better realised by a study of the adjoined original example. Now, this suit is carried out in olive green face cloth, the jacket trimmed moleskin fur and bands of grey suède, the silk jumper and squash felt hat emphasising the latter nuance, as also the coat lining.

The use of face cloth and the selection of green serve at once to stamp the model as of the moment, although others might prefer sand or pale grey, a pleasant contrast to the last named being royal blue suède and grey fur, while beaver would go well with the sand, together with touches of deep orange. There is, too, metallic embroidery to be considered in the same connection, and that still further enhances the dressy appearance.

Our surprising climate gives us so many warm days in early spring, when winter clothes, both from weight and appearance, seem impossible, that the usefulness of such a tout ensemble as that depicted in our sketch scarcely needs pointing out.

Those costume coats that are not short and free after this manner are shaped to the figure and are frequently finished by a deep volant that brings them within a few inches of the skirt hem. L. M. M.

£22,500 was paid in banknotes by me at my offices at Calder House, Piccadilly, for a pearl necklace. It would have realised more at auction. If you are contemplating selling the contents of your house by auction, don't at the eleventh hour entertain a cash offer, but let the sale proceed. Why? you ask. Simply because you will probably get a half or even double as much. If you are in urgent need of money and have entrusted to me the valuation and the arrangement of the sale, I am willing to advance, if you need it, £2,000 to £5,000 before the sale can take place. In your own interests the auction sale is the thing.

High Court Judges—past and present—always advise Hurcomb. Tapestries, pictures, engravings, fiddles, postage stamps, porcelain, objects of art, all sell equally well. Two trusted experts motor all over the kingdom, and for a fee of 21/- will point out your treasures and tell you the price you will get if you wished to realise.

Write and ask them to call when next in your vicinity. Will buy for cash, but advise the auction. I am always in attendance at Calder House, where I hold auction sales every week. Valuations for all purposes at reasonable fees.

FROM A NOTEBOOK

A GARDENER'S ASSISTANT.

TO look through the extraordinarily full and practical catalogue issued by Messrs. Pennell and Son of Lincoln is to come to the conclusion that almost anyone, however circumstanced, could manage a garden of vegetables and flowers successfully if they merely followed the plain and simple instructions given there and chose the seeds there described. The catalogue covers a very wide range, including not only seeds and plants, but cutlery, tools, fumigants, manure and so on, and is fully illustrated, with several coloured plates.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PURITY IN EAU DE COLOGNE.

Very few people know that one of the most expensive ingredients of Eau de Cologne is neroli and that in cheaper brands petit grain is often used instead of it. This is the explanation why, sometimes, Eau de Cologne used for a headache seems not only powerless to lessen, but absolutely to intensify the pain. It is therefore very important that perfectly pure Eau de Cologne, such as the "4711," which is obtainable from most chemists and high-class perfume dealers, should be insisted upon. It is sold in half-crown flasks of a convenient size to carry in the bag or waistcoat pocket, and those who have to undertake strenuous mental work, or are likely to find themselves in overcrowded rooms, concert halls or theatres, should certainly provide themselves with one and experience the refreshing effect of "4711" sprinkled in the palm of the hand or on the pocket handkerchief.

A BOOK OF BLOUSES.

The jumper has done its best to oust the blouse from popularity; but it has never succeeded, and there are growing indications that, among the well dressed, the blouse is taking on a renewed favour and bids fair to be more than ever the mode. Messrs. Wm. Hollins, 24, Newgate Street, E.C.1, whose fabrics are so well known and whose wares can be obtained from every high-class draper, are specialising in blouses made in their materials—"Japshan" in five qualities, "Viyella" in tropical or standard weights, "Aza," "Clydella," "Ramada," Jap silks and crêpe de Chine. They have issued a delightful booklet showing the designs in which their blouses are being made, eighteen of them being made in all these materials and four in nine of them. The point to be particularly noted in connection with Hollins-made blouses is that if by any chance one should shrink or fade or fail, on any just ground for complaint, to give satisfaction, it will be replaced free of charge.

A PRIZE WORTH WINNING.

The splendid effort which is being made to raise money for the hospitals has one of its most fascinating manifestations in the Great Competition, the prize fund of which is £15,000, particulars being obtainable from Hospitals Competition, Devonshire House, Piccadilly, W.1. Five-shilling qualifying tickets enable anyone to enter the Competition, all the work of which can be done in a few moments, and the prizes are as likely to be won by a child as the cleverest grown-up person. The date of the Competition's closing will be advertised. Everyone who wants to take part in this competition, in which the first prize is £7,500, should write for their tickets at once.

WIRELESS FOR THE COUNTRY HOUSE.

Jules Verne himself could have dreamed no dream more wonderful than the present-day reality of the development of wireless broadcasting, by which space is annihilated and, through the air, words being spoken miles and miles away are distinctly heard. That the lonely occupant of a room may turn a switch and find the chamber filled at once with the music actually being played at that moment in some great concert hall, or hear a résumé of the news of the moment, is certainly as marvellous as any fairy story. The prospects of enjoyment and of linking ourselves with the happenings of the day which broadcasting offers are to no one more important than to the owner of the country house. Some people, convinced of this, are still hesitating as to how best to arrange the installation. In this connection the Telephone Manufacturing Co., Limited, of Hollingsworth Works, Dulwich, who undertake not only to instal wireless apparatus, but, if required, to inspect it from time to time and ensure the perfection of the service, should certainly be made a note of. They are well known as makers of house telephones and have now for some time been manufacturing a variety of high-class wireless broadcasting receivers from simple crystal sets to cabinets-de-luxe.

The Country House Party

THE beauty of melody moves us, but the beauty of white arms, a complexion soft and clear, has a freshness which fascinates. Eyes and hair may be beautiful, but it's the clear skin with the flush of health which gives that touch of radiant charm.

The care of the skin is mainly a matter of using the right toilet soap. Premier Vinolia Soap is so pure that its creamy lather simply caresses the skin. It is gently cleansing and refreshing; its perfume is delightful, yet pleasingly elusive. Premier gives the perfect toilet.

Furnishing the House

By R. RANDAL PHILLIPS and ELLEN WOOLRICH
Editors of "Our Homes and Gardens."
With nearly 150 illustrations, from fine photographs.
Quarto. Price 10s. 6d. (postage 1/- extra).

THIS book brings under review the furnishing of all the rooms of the house, from basement to attic. It offers practical advice as to what are considered to be the most satisfactory treatments and gives a wealth of examples of rooms actually carried out — so much more convincing than drawings of projected schemes.

The book shows how, in the furnishing of the house, comfort and convenience can be combined with the character that belongs to good furniture or the past and of the present. It is essentially practical in character, and most helpful for the many suggestions contained in its pages.

An illustrated prospectus will be sent post free on application to the Publisher, "Country Life," Ltd., 20, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. 2.

SEWAGE PURIFICATION

The Plumbing at your Country House may be modern, but have you satisfied yourself regarding final treatment of the sewage? Some better provision than the insanitary cesspool is called for as an insurance against ill health. "Safety First" is wisely applied against poisoning by septic liquids discharged to country ditches.

Apart from the menace to health, cesspools are prohibitive in cost when you consider pumping and cartage charges.

The effluent from our schemes is comparable to rainwater, free from smell, and incapable of causing a nuisance.

Sir Frederick Fison, Bart., writes: "The sewage plant which you put down at Boarzell, 10 years ago, has worked excellently."

Other letters:
". . . . your system is practically automatic and requires very little attention indeed, which in these difficult days of labour is a great advantage."
"The installation has been working quite well, and is very satisfactory."

The only satisfactory Fire for a Boudoir is a Gas Fire

BECAUSE delicate hangings and furniture should not be exposed to the smuts and dirt which always accompany the burning of a coal fire.

Because a boudoir is necessarily an occasional room, required for odd moments of waiting, a brief rest before dressing, or a quiet hour's writing.

Such occasions arise suddenly and it is more than convenient to be able to enjoy in a few moments the radiant warmth of a cheerful fire without trouble in lighting or a tiresome wait for the fire to burn up.

A gas fire does not involve extra work for a small household staff.

Since the gas can be turned out the moment its heat is no longer needed, the economy of a gas fire in the boudoir can be readily appreciated.

A modern gas fire of a design which harmonises with the general scheme of decoration adds greatly to the beauty of the room.

THE MODERN GAS FIRE IS THE CLEAN, EVER-READY, ECONOMICAL FIRE

All who value convenience, comfort and economy in their homes should write for an illustrated brochure entitled, "Woman in her Home."

AUSTRALORPS.

AUSTRALIAN Black Utility Orpingtons, more generally known under the name of "Australorps," are one of the coming breeds in the poultry world. The Prince of Wales has purchased a pen of the Boomerang breed Australorps for his utility stock farm on the Duchy of Cornwall estate. A club has been formed to encourage Australian Black Orpingtons. Lady Marjorie Beckett is President, and the Hon. Secretary is Mrs. Ward-Jackson, Street Court, Kingsland, Herefordshire.

A HANDY CATALOGUE OF SEEDS.

Edward Webb and Sons (Stourbridge), Limited, of Wordsley, Stourbridge, is the comprehensive, well arranged order sheet included. A gardener will find his time saved and his memory pleasantly jogged by its useful and detailed form, running to some sixteen pages and covering almost all sorts of vegetables, seed potatoes and garden implements, and leaving plenty of space for flower seeds. Messrs. Webb are sending the catalogue post free to every reader of COUNTRY LIFE who cares to write for it.

THE SCOTTISH WIDOWS' FUND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

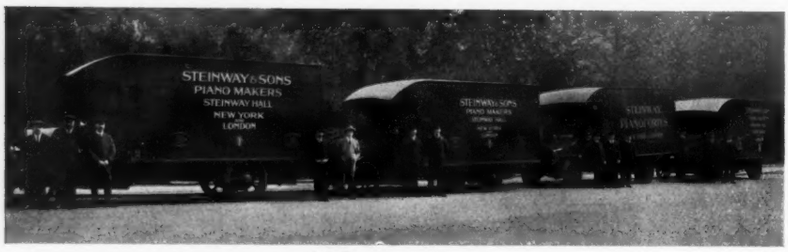
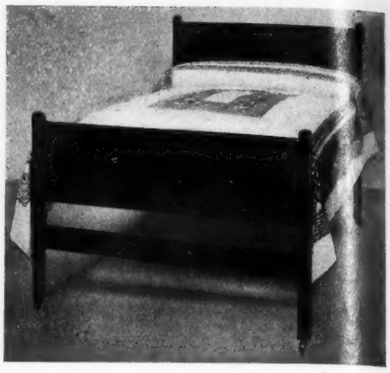
CONCERT GRANDS ON TOUR.

We show in the photograph below four of the fleet of six great vans in which Messrs. Steinway have sent the Steinway concert grand all over the country, to be used at the public performances of musical celebrities. When a great artist is on tour in the provinces one of these buff and silver Steinway vans is detailed to precede him or her from town to town, carrying the concert grand which is to be used.



HOW STEINWAY GRANDS TRAVEL ON TOUR.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE BED.



The bed has always been an important article of furniture, but it has never been more fully realised than it is to-day that the whole character of a bedroom can be made or marred by it. Messrs. Staples and Co., Limited, of Chitty Street Works, W.1, so well known as makers of most hygienic and comfortable mattresses, also specialise in the manufacture of bedsteads. We illustrate one of their many excellent designs.

ROUND THE WORLD WITH "JOHNNIE WALKER."

There can be few people who would not like to travel round the world. but that takes both time and money, and most of us would be very well content to be globe-trotters by favour of a book if we could discover one which, picking out the salient points of other lands, wafted us "round the world and back again" in the course of an evening's study. The proprietors of "Johnnie Walker" whisky, Messrs. John Walker and Sons, Limited, of Kilmarnock, have issued a volume called "Around the World," incidentally symbolising the fame which "Johnnie Walker" has earned in all corners of the earth, perfectly designed to gratify such armchair travel ambitions. Each country is dealt with in a few pages, most important towns, monuments and industries being described in a few vivid words, accompanied by well chosen and well reproduced illustrations. Taking one country at random, Portugal is dealt with in six pages, which describe in detail Lisbon, with, of course, due mention of Belem, Cintra, Oporto, Braga, Douro and Traz-as-Montes; three pages are devoted to illustrations. The book is excellently bound, the illustrations beautifully printed, and a useful index makes it an ideal work of reference or souvenir of past travels.

CARPETS—OLD AND NEW

By W. G. Thomson.

Hand-woven Carpets, Oriental and European, by A. F. Kendrick and C. E. C. Tattersall. With 205 plates, of which nineteen are in colour. (Benn Brothers, 2 Vols., £5 5s. net.)

THE chief works of reference to Oriental carpets hitherto have been certain splendid publications of the Austrian and German presses. They are of large size with magnificent coloured plates and are now difficult to procure on account of their rarity and great price. Through these the study of Oriental carpets received great stimulus. Later research has modified several of the deductions of their writers and provided additional and important material. Smaller books were produced especially for amateurs in America, where great collections are formed, but, in general, these books are somewhat limited in their scope. The present volumes bridge over the gulf between the early and later books. They are large enough to include a comprehensive and detailed historical review of carpet-making of every known nationality, technical analysis and identification of the more modern Oriental carpets in the market, and much other valuable information. The work is divided into three sections—historical, technical and plates, to which the second volume is devoted.

The art of weaving carpets is of great antiquity. The oldest existing specimens of the knotted pile carpet, as at present ascertained, are the late twelfth century wall hangings at Quedlinburg, Germany, and three carpets at Konia, Asia Minor, but recent exploration in the Gobi desert has brought fragments to light which may be much earlier still. Although very important, they do not compare for a moment with the productions of the Persian looms of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, when every weaver was a poet and an artist whose design lived for centuries after. The wonderful "Garden" carpet made for Chosroes I (531–579), with its ground of gold, its parterres of flowers, and its paths and watercourses worked with precious and semi-precious stones, is described by Mr. Kendrick, who finds the design of "Garden" carpets belonging to several owners, including the Hon. H. D. McLaren, C.B.E., corresponds to the description, though later in date by a thousand years. Almost all the world-famous carpets of Persia are referred to in this chapter; we have here, among others, the "Hunting" carpets belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Ilchester. The Ardabil and other Victoria and Albert Museum carpets are fully discussed, as well as the Shah Abbas precious silk rugs at one time supposed to be of Polish origin.

It is hard to believe that pile carpet weaving was not an ancient native craft in India, but every historian seems to date its introduction to the establishment of Persian weavers in Lahore and other towns in the reign of the Emperor Akbar (1556–1605). The industry flourished and an export trade became possible. Carpets were ordered by English clients, the most striking instance being the large carpet in the Girdlers' Hall, which was presented to the company by Robert Bell in 1634 and bears his arms and those of the company.

After the Indian, the carpets of Asia Minor are fully described. They seem to have been the first importations into Europe and it is those we see represented in the primitive pictures by John Van Eyck, Mabuse, Memling, Holbein and other early artists. A good example is depicted in Holbein's "The Ambassadors" in the National Gallery. Of Persian, Armenian, Asia Minor and native motives are the designs of carpets woven between the Caspian and Black Seas. These influences form the best records, and almost the only ones, of the history of the craft there. Peculiar in technique and colour and primitive in design are those of the Turcoman tribes of Asia. They are full of charm, but no specimens of great age remain. The history of Chinese carpet making is obscure in the present state of research. Mr. Kendrick thinks there are grounds for belief that it is not of great antiquity. The design is individual and unmistakable, while it is of great variety. Two Chinese carpets, however, are noted in an English document of the Commonwealth period and another in an inventory of 1619.

The section dealing with European productions is, of course, of relatively small compass. The older carpets of Spain are fully and ably described, but there is no mention of the Royal Manufactory of Tapestry, Madrid, where carpets have been woven for a long period and are still being made under the direction of a descendant of the original Flemish weavers. The French portion, too, is short and a little space might have been given to the ateliers of Aubusson. There are limits of space, however, to every book and we are grateful for the fine account of carpet weaving in England, with very interesting illustrations, ranging from 1570 to 1767—the most important notice the English craft has yet received.

The technical part is most practical and shows a great amount of original research. Beginning with the loom, methods of weaving and carpet group characteristics, it furnishes us with a careful technical analysis of many of the carpets illustrated, the materials of which carpets are made, their dimensions and shapes, their colours and dyes, with a candid admission that early dyes are not all permanent, nor are all synthetic dyes unequal to the old substances. There follows a chapter on design (where a little more space on the symbolic motives would have been welcome), and we come to "practical considerations," a very valuable portion which describes "fakes" and how to detect them and the question of price, where a ready reckoner system of valuation is explained. Of great importance to most readers is the classification of modern market carpets from Smyrna, Kula, Melas, Ladik and the many Caucasian and Persian centres. It is a most difficult study, but gives excellent results. There is a series of good diagrams of the particular motives found on certain specified types of carpets, but the chief feature is the collection of fine illustrations of these modern carpets which the authors, by arrangement with Messrs. Hiersemann of Leipzig, have reproduced from Neugebauer and Orendi's "Handbuch der Orientalischen Teppichkunde," and to which they have added others.

The splendid plates of the older carpets constitute an unrivalled series with the modern and put all previous publications in the shade. Famous carpets in Continental museums and in many private collections as well as some in private ownership in this country, and above all the remarkable series in the Victoria and Albert Museum are reproduced here. The value of these illustrations alone to the student, the connoisseur and the collector is incalculable—nor is it less to the lover of all beautiful things. The high standard of expertise in the historical portion, the profound technical knowledge, much of which has been published for the first time and is the result of long, painstaking labour, will ensure that for a long period this work will be the leading standard authority on the subject of hand-woven carpets.

OLD ENGLISH EMBROIDERIES

PICTURES, DRAWINGS AND PORCELAIN.

NO embroidery was more highly esteemed than that made in England during the last half of the thirteenth century and the first half of the fourteenth. After that period the art deteriorated in a degree, but its use in secular decoration brought about a wonderful revival. A great stimulus appears to have been given to dress embroidery by Katharine of Aragon, first Queen of Henry VIII, who introduced what is known as Spanish work or Black work, which, popular for over fifty years, was an influence for good on the native style. English embroideries of great importance and beauty are to be disposed of by Messrs. Sotheby on February 9th, the first series being the property of General the Hon. R. Stuart Wortley of Highcliffe Castle, Hants, who derived it from Louisa, Marchioness of Waterford.

Firstly, there is the "pillow-bere" or cushion cover of fine white linen upon which is embroidered a lattice with circular flower-like forms at the intersections. The diamonds are decorated with birds, ostriches and turkeys, eagles and other birds, in two series, with alternating rows of conventional ornaments, based on the pink, trefoil and other motives of very quaint appearance. It is worked in black and gold threads. There are also caps and bodice fronts, one set beautifully embroidered in black with rose hips and foliage, another with thistles and oak, and two pieces of fine lawn with designs of butterflies and little frogs in black, the lawn being slashed and buttonhole stitched between the embroidery. The most impressive dress embroidery is an Elizabethan lady's coat with sleeves of white linen. Its surface is decorated with a pattern of stout spirals from which come exquisitely worked flowers and fruit. We have here acorns and leaves, daffodils, strawberry blossoms and fruit, lilies, roses, pinks, peas-cods or broom-cods, and heartsease, among which are bees, dragons or butterflies, snails and caterpillars, with occasional birds. The whole, of glowing colour, is like an Elizabethan lyric or a posy culled from a Shakespearean garden.

ENGLISH GLOVES OF CREAM LEATHER. CIRCA 1600.

LADY'S SLEEVED COAT. EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

To the Elizabethan or early Jacobean period belongs a pair of cream-colour leather gloves of uncommon type. The gauntlets are decorated with vine stems, tendrils, leaves and bunches of grapes, the ground between being spotted; the edges are finished with gold lace with sequins and grape-shaped drops, while at the open side are three loops of ribbon. To the same owner belong fine French embroidered hangings for a lady's boudoir, designed with scrolls, foliage, arabesques and Bérainesque ornament. They are about 9ft. high and of various widths. To another property belongs an old Dutch doll of wood with jointed limbs, wearing a crimson damask robe, quilted underskirt, crinoline in green silk, embroidered petticoat, with knitted stockings and shoes. It was imported from Holland by Samuel Tyssen of Hackney for his daughter Sarah, about 1739, when she was eight years old. There are some interesting eighteenth century waistcoats in brocade and embroidery, and an uncommon Hogarth long coat or dressing gown of reversible colours, scarlet or dark green. Among the ecclesiastical vestments is a set in fine gold embroidery upon purple silk, with an edging of gold lace; the chasuble bears the arms of Cardinal Giovanni Battista Emilio Altieri, afterwards Pope Clement X (1670–76).

On February 8th Messrs. Sotheby will dispose of a further selection of engravings in colours from the great colour prints collection formed by the late Sir Edward Coates, Bt. It consists of portraits of ladies engraved in mezzotint and stipple.

Early English engravings, original etchings and modern prints from the Beresford Horsley collection and other sources will come under the hammer at Messrs. Christie's on February 5th. The sale includes the colour prints "Nurse and children in the fields," after Morland, by G. Keating; "Outside a country ale-house," after James Ward, by W. Ward; "Inside a country ale-house," by and after W. Ward; while from another property comes a very fine impression of "Mrs. Pelham feeding chickens," by W. Dickinson, after Sir Joshua Reynolds. There are a number of etchings by Whistler; for instance, "Westminster Bridge," "The Forge," and "The Rag-gatherers." February 6th and two following days are devoted by Messrs. Christie to the dispersal of the collection of Oriental porcelain, English pottery, silver plate, furniture and books on the fine arts, formed by the late Francis William Smith of Blackheath. The first day's sale includes many specimens of Nankin ware, Chinese enamelled porcelain, and Chinese whole-coloured porcelain. The second day opens with silver, mostly of the latter half of the eighteenth century, salt-glaze pottery, Whieldon and Astbury ware, English pottery from Lambeth, Leeds, Liverpool, Sunderland, Bristol, Wedgwood's and Elers' manufactories and Staffordshire; English and foreign porcelain, faience and Delft. On the third day the extremely useful library of books on the applied arts, of great value to collectors in the specified subjects, will come up, and the objects of art and vertu, embroideries, rugs and furniture will complete the sale. On February 9th Messrs. Christie will dispose of the important collection of pictures and drawings by A. Legros, belonging to Mr. Frank E. Bliss, with modern pictures and water-colour drawings from other sources. The Legros drawings are noteworthy, were it only for the fact that some of them were formerly in the collections of artists; for instance, "Le Labourage," or ploughing, and studies after Michael Angelo; in gold point were formerly the property of William Strang; the pencil portrait of Lord Leighton, a study for the etching, and the portrait in black and white of G. F. Watts, done for a similar purpose, both formerly belonged to Lord Leighton. Others belonged to Whistler, Sainton, Edwin Edwards and other artists. From different properties are derived drawings by Birket Foster, Brabazon, Mauve, Munnings, Edward Detaille and MacWhirter. There is an example of the art of Copley Fielding, "Dunstaffnage Castle, Argyllshire," with figures and cattle in the foreground.

A NOTE ON SHOCK ABSORBERS

SUSPENSION, with its attribute of road-holding, is usually the most difficult of the problems that the car designer of to-day has to solve. Suspension also indicates to the discriminating motorist the greatest differences among the cars of to-day. We have attained a stage when there are very few unsatisfactory engines, transmission systems and general features of chassis construction incorporated in popular cars on the market; but cars vary very considerably in the efficiency of their suspensions. A few years ago the problem was not anything like so acute, and it will serve a distinctly useful purpose if we investigate very briefly why this change has come about.

In the first place, we have only recently attained that stage of development where all engines and the like may, within very wide limits, be accepted without question as adequate and satisfactory in the discharge of their functions. Previously, say in pre-war days, designers and manufacturers were found enough to do in developing their power units and general chassis construction, so that suspension was relegated to a position of comparatively minor import. In their outlook designers were distinctly encouraged by conditions then ruling. The average speed of cars on the road in, say, 1914 was considerably lower than it is to-day. The roads of 1914 were, on the whole, considerably better than they are to-day. Perhaps we had not so many really magnificent first-class roads, but we had far fewer stretches of bad surfaces than we have now; so that, whereas the best road of 1914 was not so good as the best road of 1923, the average was distinctly higher.

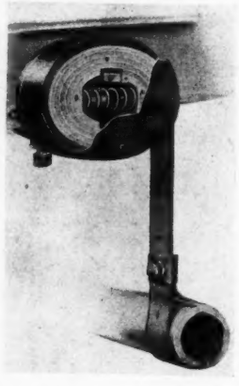
Now, suspension is essentially dependent on three things, or, more accurately perhaps, one might say that the function of suspension is to satisfy three primary requirements. The first is varying speed, the second is varying road surfaces, and the third is varying load. Eliminate the variable part of any one of these and you have gone a very long way towards reducing the suspension problem. Let us take each one in order and then altogether.

EFFECT OF SPEED VARIATIONS.

A car that may be perfectly sprung for travelling at 20 m.p.h., may be quite hopeless at 40 m.p.h. or more. The converse holds good. A car normally designed as regards its suspension system for travelling at speeds in excess of 40 m.p.h. may be a very uncomfortable vehicle in which to ride at 30 m.p.h. This is one of the many respects in which racing has proved of such benefit to the private motorist, for the wide range of speeds covered by the racing car brings to its designer and driver problems which they would not otherwise encounter and which they are compelled to solve before they can anticipate any measure of success. And so the designer of the touring car, profiting by the lessons that he learns on the track, or even more actively with his road racing cars, is in a position to provide or to attempt to provide springing which shall give comfort over a wide variation of road speeds. The higher the speed the stiffer the springs need to be, but never must the "springy" element be entirely eliminated. One of the most successful of the light cars that regularly appears at Brooklands Track has springs so adjusted and so controlled by shock absorbers that if the tail of the car be lifted or depressed by hand it remains in the position in which it is left!

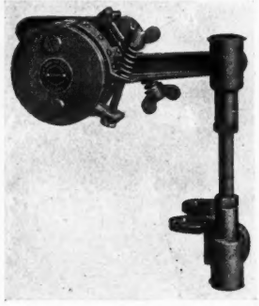
ROAD SURFACE AND VARYING LOAD.

The effect of varying road surfaces is or should be fairly obvious. A car requires very different suspension when travelling through the pot-holed area of Chertsey, or over the stone cobbles of Lancashire, from that which it requires for, say, regular journeys along the Bath Road. As regards varying load, this aspect has been brought into prominence during the last few years on account of the general reduction in car weights. If a car weighs two tons it is obvious that the addition of one or two passengers weighing, say, 150lb. each makes much less difference to the riding qualities of the car than if the total unladen weight is something like 15cwt., which is a fairly good average weight for the light four-seater of to-day. The modern tendency is towards lighter and yet lighter cars, and one of the biggest obstacles that the tendency has to overcome is the problem of suspension.



The Gabriel "Snubber," a cheap and simple spring rebound damper.

The Houdaille shock absorber, which checks rebound hydraulically.



The Smith frictional absorber. Spring action in both directions can be controlled by turning the two wing nuts.

As has already been stated, if the variable nature of any one of these factors—speed, road surface and load—could be eliminated, the suspension problem would be very much simpler than it is; but no one wants to travel—and very seldom could he travel if he wanted to—at a constant speed. No one wants to be restricted in the roads that he can and cannot use, and no one is willing to forego the ability to pick up a passenger whenever he feels inclined. Therefore, the whole question of suspension must be a question of compromise.

IMPROVEMENTS IN SPRINGS.

The first line that progress took in this direction was a general increase in the length of springs and a reduction of their camber. Look at a car of about ten years of age and notice how its springs are all more or less—generally more—curved in shape; compare the springs of a car to-day and notice that if they are not absolutely flat their curvature or their camber is almost negligible. As this note is not intended to be a technical dissertation on the function of car springs, but rather to give an indication as to how shock absorbers contribute to the solution of suspension problems, it would be out of place to enter into the various considerations that have led to an increase in the length of springs and a reduction in their curvature, and we will be content with suggesting that any reader who feels any doubt as to the benefits accruing from a lengthening and flattening of springs should take a run in a car with short, steeply cambered springs and then try an approximately similar car of which the springs are relatively long and flat.

SPRING "PERIODICITY."

By its nature every spring has what is known as a vibration period: that is to say, when it is struck or compressed, on release it will continue to vibrate at a certain speed, and these vibrations or oscillations will, in the absence of friction, last for a very long time. If, after being given an oscillatory impulse, the springs of a car receive a second shock from the road at a certain point of their oscillation, the motion of the car due to the flexibility of its springs will be very much increased. Therefore, it is advisable to damp out and to stop the oscillation of a spring as quickly as possible, within limits. If it is damped out too quickly it will, of course, mean an elimination of the spring's flexibility, and so, once again, one has to adopt an attitude of compromise, and to determine how rapidly the oscillations may be checked without reducing the flexibility. This is the basis on which rests the employment of leaf springs in a car, because the friction between the leaves and the different periodicity of each leaf tend to reduce the oscillatory period of the complete spring.

But in spite of the elaborate precautions taken with the construction of car springs, designers have, metaphorically and practically, almost thrown up the sponge. The problem has become too much for them, and they have increased its acuteness by providing cars that have a wide speed range and which, with a comparatively low weight, have a very considerable carrying capacity, which may or may not at any given moment be fully utilised by the owner. Remembering that even trains—where speed, load, and the equivalent of road surfaces are almost constants—are provided with springs, some idea may be gleaned of the difficulty of the motor car designer in this matter. But by way of precaution we may forestall the criticism that we have invited by saying that car designers have thrown up the sponge as regards solving the problem of satisfactory suspension. There are, of course, many cars—in fact the large majority—which are supplied to the public without any auxiliary or compensating suspension arrangement, and these cars give every satisfaction in ordinary use. Nevertheless, their designers would, as a general rule, be the very last to maintain that the suspension was incapable of improvement, and mostly they will tell you quite frankly that the simplest method of improvement may be obtained by the fitting of shock absorbers.

The Latest Austin Model

The Austin Twelve

The "Berkeley" landaulet was introduced by the Austin Motor Company at Olympia last year, and has been warmly welcomed as a chauffeur-driven car of unusual economy. It has a roomy interior with accommodation for four persons, while there is a spare seat beside the driver. Upholstery is in enamelled hide or Bedford Cord matching the finish chosen. The "Austin Twelve" chassis is known for its economical running and low cost of upkeep. The "Berkeley" landaulet is an excellent model for the doctor and traveller, and for the country or town house. The price of the "Berkeley" landaulet is £600 at Works.

TWO KINDS OF SHOCK ABSORBERS

In a general way the function of a shock absorber is to reduce the vibration period of a spring; but there is another kind of device inaccurately termed shock absorber, the function of which is to increase the flexibility of a spring. Some cars, especially low-priced Americans, primarily designed for the negotiation of the roughest road surfaces at low speeds and nearly always with maximum load, have very stiff springs which, on good roads, deprive the car of satisfactory riding qualities. Such cars require increased springing flexibility, and a shock absorber providing this effect is that known as the "J. M.," consisting of a spring-loaded piston in a cylinder, the piston being connected to the spring and the cylinder to the chassis of the car, although in some instances—as, for instance, when the car is fitted with three-quarter elliptic springs—the "J. M." may be interposed between the quarter elliptic upper leaf and the semi-elliptic lower leaf. The Halladay—sold, like the "J. M.," by the Streatham Engineering Company, Limited—works on a different principle, but in effect is much the same. It ought to be stated that the Streatham Engineering Company, Limited, also sell the "J. M." Compensator, which is a shock absorber in the narrower sense and not a mere auxiliary spring, as are the other two devices mentioned.

J.M. shock absorbers applied to three-quarter elliptic springs. This type of apparatus is especially useful in absorbing the minor shocks before they reach the main suspension.

Much difference of opinion exists as to the functions that a shock absorber should satisfy, and there is fully justifiable room for this difference of opinion. Some cars merely require their springs to be stiffened, and especially is this the case with racing vehicles or any of which the owner lays primary stress on speed—according to the principle, soft springs for low speeds, hard springs for high speeds. For this use the Hartford, or some ingenious evasion of its patent, is widely accepted as the best type. This absorber consists of a pair of arms, the end of one of which is attached to a convenient point of the chassis and the other to a point on the springs, generally the point of greatest movement—i.e., in the case of a semi-elliptic spring, in the middle; in the case of a quarter-elliptic or a cantilever spring, to the point of attachment to the axle. The two arms each terminate in a disc, between the two of which are interposed a pair of wooden discs, between which again is a single metal disc, and the whole of the assembly is then clamped together by a spring washer—loaded nut and bolt. According to the extent to which the nut is tightened on the bolt (indicated by a pointer and numbers on an outer plate of the whole assembly) the amount of restrictive friction exercised by the wooden discs on the movement of the two arms is controlled. Thus, this shock absorber checks the movement of the spring in both upward and downward directions, the greater the movement the greater being the amount of check exercised. When the car passes over a bump the whole of the travel of the springs has to take place against the friction of the shock absorber, and the same applies to the return motion. It is very seldom indeed that a car turns out for a big road race or for any event at Brooklands without four Hartfords, one to each spring; and they are used on at least one high class touring car with cantilever rear springs—presumably to check the rolling tendency.

Among the shock absorbers that exist for checking rebound only—which, when all is said and done, is the primary function, in theory at least, of the shock absorber—the Gabriel Snubber is very simple both in principle and in construction. It consists of a coil of specially prepared and very strong fabric tape which is wrapped round a small helical spring. This is encased in a cover consisting of a pair of metal discs, and the other end of the tape is pulled out (like the end of a tape measure) and fastened to the axle. When the axle rises as the wheel goes over a bump the tape is taken into its carrying case under the expanding action of the helical spring. Then, as the car spring begins to return, or rebound, the coils of the tape or belting passing over each other impose a resistance that checks the first portion of the rebound of the car spring, decreasing gradually as the coil spring in the snubber itself compresses. It is thus a pure snubbing control to the return action of a car axle after it has gone over a bump. Not the least of the attractions of the Gabriel, which is sold by Messrs. Brown Brothers, Limited, is that it is one of the cheapest shock absorbers that can be bought, although its price depends on the size of the car to which it is to be fitted.

"REBOUND" ABSORBERS.

Another shock absorber of which the function is only to absorb rebound is the Houdaille, made by the Houdaille Hydraulic Suspension Company, Limited, of 41, New Bond Street, W.1. In construction the Houdaille is rather more elaborate than most, for it is hydraulic in action, consisting in essentials of a piston working in a cylinder of pure castor oil. As the car spring rises, an automatic valve allows the piston in the oil-filled cylinder to move freely, but as soon as the car spring attempts to return the valve is closed and the piston can only return slowly against the then restricted rate of movement of the oil through a small escape hole. There is, of course, provision for regulating the rate of movement of the oil and thus controlling the braking power of the shock absorber, so that the best fitting for any particular car may be found, and indeed must be found, by an actual road test. This, of course, is a provision that applies to practically every shock absorber.

A SHOCK OR REBOUND ABSORBER COMBINED.

A shock absorber working on the friction principle but having two separate actions, each capable of independent adjustment, is the Smith patent coil friction shock absorber and rebound damper which is made by Messrs. Frank Smith and Co. of Elland, Yorkshire. A vertical arm attached to the point of greatest movement of the spring is in turn connected through a more or less horizontal arm to a pair of band brakes operating on a drum fixed to the chassis. The effect of this absorber is to check either the shock or the rebound according to the way in which it is adjusted. Thus, whereas some drivers maintain that the function of a shock absorber should be to check rebound only, and others prefer a shock absorber that checks both shock and rebound, both may have their requirements satisfied by this instrument. There are a couple of wing nuts, one of which adjusts what may be called the shock absorption, the other adjusts the rebound absorption, so that if desired the driver may leave the shock absorption nut quite loose so that it does not function, and have the instrument controlling rebound only. Also, with this type of absorber it should be possible to compensate any inequality among the springs of the car. This property is, of course, available to some extent with all shock absorbers, each being adjusted to suit the spring to which it is actually fitted; but on account of its capacity for independent adjustment for either shock or rebound the Smith instrument should be capable of a wider range of adaptability in this respect.

EFFECT ON TYRE WEAR.

By way of conclusion it may be pointed out that not the least of the advantages of the shock absorber, properly fitted and applied, is the reduction it effects in tyre wear. A very large proportion of the wear of tyres is due to their spinning when the car jumps over a bump and then violently strikes the ground at high speed. In the case of a wheel in the air, its speed is, of course, increased by the action of the differential, because immediately it becomes free the wheel in the air begins to accelerate up to a speed that would, given sufficient time, just double the speed of the other wheel in contact with the ground. By tending to keep the tyres in constant contact with the road the shock absorber does more than improve the riding qualities of the car; it very considerably lengthens the life of the tyres and, incidentally, of the whole chassis.

Finally, not a few makers of the highest class and most expensive cars are beginning to fit shock absorbers as "standard." When a car of which the springing has come in for such extensive and intensive admiration as has that of the Rolls-Royce, is being fitted with shock absorbers, it may be safely accepted that we are a long way from springing perfection in the judgment of those who ought to know, and that the shock absorber is capable of bringing nearer that deisred perfection.

Striking testimony from a Cross Channel Air Pilot

JUSTIFIABLE enthusiasm for a superb machine prompted Capt. E. D. C. Herne, a well-known pilot of one of the fast Continental air-expresses, to write expressing his appreciation of the faultless service rendered by his B.S.A. "Light Six" Twin-Cyl. Motor Bicycle. Capt. Herne is a motor cyclist of considerable experience, having owned practically every well-known make of high powered machine since he became interested in the sport in 1904. After 8,000 miles absolutely trouble-free running his opinion is considered and emphatic: "I say with due deliberation that my 6 h.p. B.S.A. is the finest solo machine I have ever ridden." YOU should read Capt. Herne's letter in full before deciding on your new mount. It has been reproduced as a leaflet, and a copy will be sent post free on application. who was offending against any of the rules of the road. The suggestion seemed too absurd to receive serious consideration anywhere except in the columns of an agitating newspaper, but it appears to appeal to the imagination of certain local authorities in Lancashire, where, whenever a private motorist commits a wrong, a policeman is sent out to commit a greater wrong in an effort to check the original offender.

Recently a case was brought before the Liverpool magistrates in which a char-à-bancs driver was prosecuted for exceeding the speed limit, the police estimate of his speed being based on the reading of the speedometer of the motor cycle and sidecar that they were using. The char-à-bancs driver invited the police to check the reading of his speedometer by that of their machine, but the invitation was declined, and as a result the stipendiary said that he had no alternative but to dismiss the case.

Every experienced motorist is aware that the readings of speedometers are apt to vary slightly, while at low speeds it is the rule rather than the exception to find a very considerable variation. It is very seldom indeed that, if two vehicles be driven side by side at, say, 10 m.p.h., both instruments will indicate this speed exactly, although at speeds in excess of about 20 m.p.h. the variation may be negligible. Presumably the char-à-bancs was travelling at somewhere near its legal limit if one may judge by the remarks of its driver, and its legal limit is, of course, 12 m.p.h.

An American Government Propaganda Film.

As a medium of propaganda the cinema film is being used to a much greater extent than hitherto in the motor industry, and there is little doubt that it provides a very interesting and convenient means of acquainting the public with the inner workings of modern car manufacture, regarding which they would otherwise remain in ignorance. One of the latest films to appear in this country shows the methods adopted in the production of Studebaker cars, and it is worthy of note that the film was prepared by the United States Department of Commerce as one of a series of Government propaganda films to emphasise the industrial greatness of America. The Studebaker factory at South Bend, Indiana, which is exclusively devoted to the production of the "Light Six" model, was selected by the Department as it is the latest factory in America to have been erected and equipped, and is recognised in automobile circles in the States as containing the last word in plant for car production in big quantities.

The cinema film has been employed by several British motor car manufacturers, notably Messrs. Morris Motors, Limited, of Oxford, who, we believe, were the first, and Messrs. A. Harper, Sons and Bean, Limited, of Dudley, but there is this difference between the British and American enterprise. The former is entirely private, being conducted by the firms with whose products it is concerned; the latter is, apparently, State aided. One, naturally, wishes that the British Government would give to the British manufacturer the same assistance in this form of publicity propaganda that the American Government gives to its manufacturers. Presumably, the Studebaker film is being shown all over the world in part, if not exclusively, at the expense of the American Government. Wherever a British film is shown the makers concerned have to foot the bill. Is it that no department of the British Government has the interest of the British manufacturer at heart, or is it simply that the department concerned has an outlook so limited that it cannot see any value or practical utility in giving material assistance to such propaganda efforts of British industry?

The Roadside Petrol Pump.

MAINLY owing to the initiative of the Anglo American Oil Company, the roadside petrol pump is now a common object in Great Britain, the extent to which it is appreciated by motorists being testified by the manner in which it has increased during the last year, but in certain quarters objection is raised to the petrol pump and this objection is of a widely varying nature. On the one hand local authorities have objected to it, the real basis of their objections being best known to themselves, but being given ostensibly as possible obstruction to traffic and there is also an apparently organised campaign to divert the motorist from its use.

This campaign is fastening upon two points; the first the accuracy of the measure given by the pumps, and the second the quality of the fuel supplied. As regards the first, a test case has decided that the pump is not a measuring instrument within the meaning of the act, and therefore, the weights and measures department of the Board of Trade are not required to inspect the pump periodically, but a guarantee of the accuracy of the measure is given by the manufacturers of the pump and careful investigations have generally revealed that there is no reason to question the soundness of this guarantee.

As regards the quality of the fuel, we are informed that that supplied through the Golden Pumps is identical with that contained in Pratts' No. 1 cans whenever the pumps are labelled as containing No. 1 brand spirit. The pumps are, of course, installed by garage proprietors at their own expense, but the petrol companies take is an apt description of the great fleet of tankers of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. Ltd. These ships, marking the highest development in the marine transportation of oil, carry the crude oil from the famous Persian wells to Llandarcy, South Wales, where "BP" Motor Spirit is produced, and later distribute the refined products to the coastal installations of the British Petroleum Company.

Two separate fleets are engaged in these operations —"black tonnage," laden with the rich, dark crude, from Persia; "white tonnage," carrying the clear, water-white finished product. Every precaution is taken to ensure that the British motorist gets his supply of "BP" as pure as it flows from the stills, and that it is always the "Best Possible."

"BP" is the only entirely British Petrol—British in every stage from the Crude Oil well to the familiar Khaki Can.

what precaution they can to ensure that the pumps shall contain only the fuel they are supposed to contain. As a matter of fact we do know of pumps that do not supply No. 1 spirit, but they are not labelled as supplying such and motorists who pull up to make use of a pump should note carefully whether it is labelled as supplying No. 1 spirit or not before they have their tank filled.

While on the subject of roadside petrol pumps we may refer to the enterprise of the United Service Petrol Stations, Limited, a private company which has no connection with any of the petrol importing companies and which, as its name implies, has been formed primarily to erect these stations and so provide employment for ex-Service men, no others being employed. Recently we had occasion to complain because so many roadside petrol pumps were without any protection in the form of a roof, and so if a tank were being replenished in the rain there was every chance of water finding its way into the fuel. This objection has been entirely overcome with the first of the United Service petrol stations.

It is situated in the Chiswick High Road, i.e., the London end of the Bath Road, at Gunnersbury, and is a most elaborate station, generously equipped with storage tanks from which practically all the chief brands of fuel may be obtained. The storage system is that known as the Bywater petrol storage system, which is the invention and property of a British firm. The tanks are, as usual, placed under the ground, and the fuel from them is forced up through the pumps by the pressure of water which is introduced from the main. It will probably come as a surprise to many readers to learn that these two things, which motorists are told should never be mixed, are housed together in the storage tank, and that the petrol is forced up to the tank of the car by the pressure of the water in proximity to it.

The advantages claimed for this system are that as the tanks are always full no petrol is lost through evaporation, and as the petrol is always drawn from the top of the tank the customer can be certain of obtaining a perfectly clear and pure spirit having no water or foreign matter in it. Obviously the water and petrol are not mixed in the tank, the former lying underneath the latter and forming a sort of foundation for it.

The pumps through which the fuel is supplied have all been tested by the National Physical Laboratory at Teddington and are certified accurate to a degree of 0.4 of a gallon in 100 gallons in favour of the customer. The measuring apparatus is automatic and can be set to draw any quantity of fuel from one to fourteen gallons, registering the amount supplied in view of the customer seated in his car, and the amount administered is entirely independent of the man operating the pump once this has been set to draw a given quantity. This excellent station has several amenities which, if not always expected, will certainly be always appreciated. Thus, compressed air for the inflation of tyres is available free of charge, as also is water for the radiator, while there is lavatory accommodation set apart for the use of private customers.

THE ROADSIDE PETROL PUMP.

A good example of the recently introduced petrol-filling stations, this one being situated at Gunnersbury. Cars may enter from either end; tanks are filled through "pumps," which have a registering dial in view of the driver at his seat, and there is no need for him to get out of the car.

THE INFLUENCE OF ENVIRONMENT

A DIVERSITY OF DRAPERIES. THE VOGUE OF MOIRE.

A GREAT truth that has for some long while been recognised by those closely conversant with dress matters is at last being appreciated by all and sundry. This is the influence brought about by different environments—climate, social conditions and types. And in a great measure this clearer vision has been brought to a head by the interesting amalgamation of a well known English couturière and the English depot of an old established Parisian house. While fully acknowledging the French capital as the first inspired ount of original ideas, the day is now long passed for slavish acceptance.

General principles and dress laws are accepted the world over, but these are now given a different interpretation, according to whether they are to be worn by American or English women, in Town, country or the provinces. One does not, for example, wear quite the sam clothes in Manchester, Liverpool or Birmingham as one does in Town, while the well turned out country woman, be she English or American, is a law unto herself.

And yet, the approved ligne and silhouette of the moment are studiously preserved throughout. But women have grown wise and have learned to know themselves, thereby realising their limitations and also their possibilities. Thus they do not accept, as in the old unthinking days, a model just because it is labelled " Paris " as something they must and can wear. While appreciating to the full the freshness and charm of an original venture, they now exact that this shall be adapted to suit various types and forms.

Englishwomen and Americans are, generally speaking, taller and more svelte of form than is the Frenchwoman, and these lines call for special treatment if they are to be brought out to their best perfection. And the figure is so much in evidence just now, that the slightest false note is apt to jar. From the early Greeks, from whom so many of the present day inspirations are drawn, much can be learned as to what constitutes the real beauty of line in a feminine figure. The aim was for truth and simplicity as is ours today, a simplicity that rests on exquisite stuffs, colour and a complete absence of superfluous decorations.

Looking back no further than the early 'eighties and 'nineties a clearer idea is gathered, by comparison, of the immense strides made; and even should the wheel of fashion revolve once more in favour of fuller skirts, a more normal waistline and other similar issues, the taste is now far too fine to accept such excrescences as high puffed sleeves and indiscriminate scraps of trimming tacked on anywhere without rhyme, reason or sequence.

Whatever La Mode has in store for us, we may rest well assured good and artistic line will somehow be maintained. Meanwhile, there seems little inclination to get away from length and slimness. So, in conformance with this desire, the leading couturières are devising slight but important changes in the disposal of draperies.

A few weeks ago we illustrated and discussed the new back bouffant drapery in connection with an evening toilette—most new draperies, it is to be remarked, make their début under these auspices—since when it has been seen introduced on afternoon frocks. A taffetas, in that new warm cinnamon shade that is almost apricot, came out exceptionally well treated after this manner, the slim, nearly normal waist corsage concealed beneath a deep pleated frill of Georgette in tone; this fell within a few inches of the waist in a square back and front like an exaggerated baby's bib. It may be mentioned en passant how these pleated bibs and also round berthes are quite a notable whim of the hour and are sufficiently long in many instances entirely to supersede sleeves. But of the piquant charm of this bouffant back drapery there is no question at all. It has come and it has conquered.

Now this week we have to show and discuss a complete volte face in the guise of a front godet drapery. This, as goes without saying, will be more easily assimilated than the other, since it is wholly free from exaggeration and of an exceeding elegance. We have selected for its expression white moiré, the revival of which silk was alluded to last week. Very souple and flexible is the new moiré and already obtainable in the very loveliest colours. But white, a full tone, rather a dead, is peculiarly attractive in this watered surface; and with it there is allied for the facing back of the godets a very pale jade green, a note of contrast that is picked up in various-sized oblong plaques in the waist-belt of silver and gold, the silver again asserting itself in a bugle lace petticoat, the bugles arranged to suggest falling rain. Over the arms there are simply dropped squares of that soft silver silk net, draperies that, if required, can be flung round the neck like a scarf, since they are merely caught into the armholes and then left absolutely free and loose, while in the hair there is worn one of the heavy twisted bandeaux of green and silver, finished by dangling ornaments over one ear. The fan of natural vulture feathers provides the one sombre touch to this delicate scheme of white and green, the rich iridescent lustre of these strange feathers being thrown up in fine relief against the white of the dress.

An Invitation to "The Gazeway"

"The Gazeway" is an old house at Surbiton, modernized, renovated and decorated by W. H. Gaze & Sons, Ltd., to show fresh ideas in furnishing, colour treatment, labour-saving and comfort. Expressly chosen for its early-Victorian inconveniences, it now presents a new standard of the practical and the beautiful. In the nine acres of grounds are well-stocked nurseries and model gardens, large and small, showing every phase of garden architecture. Adjoining the house is a separate building devoted to authentic Antiques, and a specimen of the "All-Weather" Hard Tennis Court made only by Gaze's. Its merits can be proved by actual play, either by day or when lit, for night play, by the "Nightazday" electric system. Everyone interested should write to W. Gaze, 19-23, High Street, Kingston-on-Thames, for illustrated booklet 5F., or an appointment to view "The Gazeway," where everything is for sale. Appointments are necessary to give personal attention to the large number of visitors, and can also be arranged at 10, Conduit Street, W.1. Everything at "The Gazeway" is for sale.

DIANA

The Original Ladies' Razor

DANCING and OUTDOOR SPORTS demand the use of the Diana Razor for a safe and easy method of removing the hair from under the arm. The patent domed top and curved blade fits the hollow of the arm perfectly and makes it impossible to cut the flesh.

Look at the illustration and think how quick and simple it is to shave a hollow space with such a razor. The Diana will shave both armpits in one minute.

ONE OUTLAY LASTS A LIFETIME

DIANA users require no deodorisers to eliminate perspiration odours. For beauty and health THE DIANA is indispensable.

PRICE, in silk-lined case, with special rounded corner blades.

7/9 post free.

Extra blades 2/3 for six. Send P.O. immediately to—

Where does the heat go?

Mostly up the chimney of an ordinary coal grate, for the nature of heat is to ascend.

Clearly, however, if the top of the grate is closed and the smoke outlets are at the back of the fire, most of the ascending heat must be diverted into the room, while the smoke is carried completely away.

The latter arrangement is embodied in the Nautilus (patent) Grate, and together with the complete damper control, ensures a substantial saving of coal—also abundant heat (consistently comfortable temperature, as required) with very little ash.

MAZDA ELECTRIC BULBS for MOTOR CARS

B T-H

The Magic Word

Don't just ask for "bulbs"; ask for "MAZDA" bulbs. It takes a second longer to say, but no second could be more profitably employed. This extra second spent in buying will mean extra brilliance, reliability and economy in use; greater safety and assurance in night driving, and an all-round better service from your car-lighting equipment.

Mazda bulbs are made in Rugby by the owners of the master patents. They are unequivocally British and unequivocally best.

If you buy a single bulb —whether for headlight, sidelight or interior light —it is supplied in a cardboard carton. If you buy a dozen of one sort, you get a flat box containing 12 cartons. This method of packing facilitates the handling and storage of bulbs and protects them from damage.

THE "DEVON" FIRE

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO BUILD A NEW HOUSE merely because you want to have Devon fires throughout your home. Scrap your present grates. It is a simple matter to fit DEVON FIRES in their place.

There are SIX EXCELLENT REASONS for doing so: Economy, Appearance, Construction, Labour-Saving, Little Smoke, Easy Fitting. We cannot give a full explanation here of all six reasons. If you are interested in the other five ask your local ironmonger. He is probably a "Devon" Fire enthusiast and will tell you all about them.

Reason No. 3.—CONSTRUCTION
Solid Faience Blocks or Briquettes (according to design) are ALWAYS used for the parts of the Surround which comes in contact with the Fire.
Only cements of proved quality are used in the "backing-up" of the Surrounds and this cement "backing" is reinforced by iron bars and slates which ensures a ferro-concrete finish to the back of the Surround.

Fencing has always been a difficult question—and one incurring high cost—in estate management. The need of a durable and cheap fence was met by the introduction of

Fernden Cleft Chestnut and Wire Fencing

It has been made for so many years of selected high grade materials, maintaining an unvarying excellence, that leading architects now specify "Fernden quality." A NEW DEVELOPMENT OF AN OLD SUBJECT

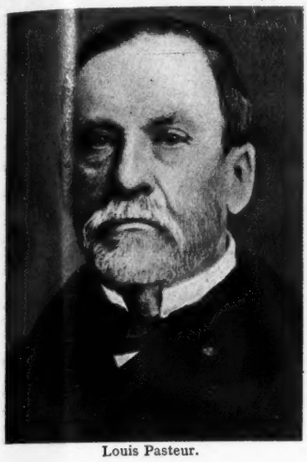
FOR many years the discoveries of Science have been applied with as much careful thought to maintaining a high standard of well-being amongst animals as amongst human beings, and stock-breeders and animal lovers—though they probably never realise it—owe a great debt of gratitude to the men who have spent their lives in medical research, particularly where it concerns the endless subject of Antisepsis.



Louis Pasteur.

Pasteur and Lister have been responsible for saving nearly as many valuable beasts as they have saved the lives of valuable men, and another scientist—who picked up the threads of their life-work where they laid them down—has recently come along to complete the lesson of the principles they propounded. His achievement is well worth noting by the stock-breeders who value the lives of their animals and the masters on whose shoulders rest the responsibilities of a kennel-full of valuable hounds.

The scientist's name is Alexandre Clement, a French-Canadian resident in London, and his discovery is an antiseptic, toxic to germs and harmless to cell-tissues; that is, a substance capable of being as successfully applied to the internal antiseptic treatment of disease as to the external. A tremendous step forward.

Since Lister's time, when great hopes were raised that means had at last been found of completely controlling infection, the failure of scientists to produce a safe internal antiseptic has been a continual stumbling block in the way of medical and veterinary progress. All the known antiseptics have been destructive to cell-tissues as well as germs, and, although invaluable when used with knowledge and care externally, if taken in sufficient doses to kill the germs of internal disease are likely to kill the patient as well.

The active principle of this new antiseptic is natural essential oil of garlic. Chemically known as trimethenal allylic carbide, it has been given the simple trade name of Yadil, for it is an antiseptic safe enough to be used freely by the ordinary layman and requiring none of the usual safeguards of an unpronounceable name to be indicated on prescriptions only by mysterious hieroglyphics.

For centuries garlic has been known to possess extraordinary antiseptic powers, but it is only recently these have been harnessed to Science. The Egyptians made good use of garlic 3,500 years B.C., and not only made it the basis of their medical practice but at one period worshipped it as the Healer Divine. A Hindu medical work dating 1,000 years B.C. refers in no uncertain voice to its virtues:

* रसोनयोगं विधिवत् क्षयार्त्तः क्षीरेणपा नागबला प्रयोगम्

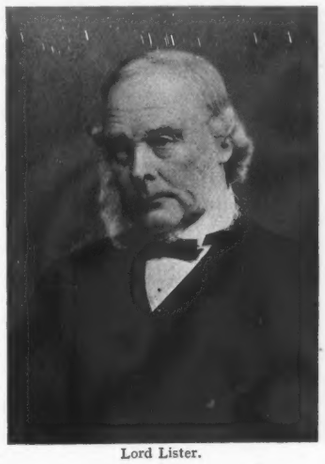
अध्याय ३१

सुश्रुत

while several of the learned writers of the Middle Ages recommended it for almost all the ills to which humanity is heir. In later days we find it being extolled mainly for its power of repelling serious infections, and several instances are recorded of people who passed unscathed through devastating plagues by safeguarding themselves with garlic in one form or another.

As a cure for tuberculosis oil of garlic has been experimented with at intervals all through medical history—often with astonishing results, but two serious drawbacks have hitherto obstructed its chances of complete success. It contains a powerful irritant which all but the strongest stomachs are apt to refuse, and it gives to the breath and the body an unbearable odour.

Yadil Antiseptic, the preparation Mr. Clement has evolved by working upon his knowledge of the vital qualities of the herb, is oil of garlic with these two drawbacks completely removed. It is absolutely non-irritant, and never leaves the faintest taint or odour. It is the ideal antiseptic that Lister and all his disciples sought for in vain, and it has already demonstrated its usefulness. It has made possible for the first time complete internal and external disinfection of the human system without any risk of poison or injury to cell tissues; and even the rank and file of the medical profession, conservative, slow always—as is probably wise—to recognise revolutionary discoveries, is gradually admitting its astonishing powers. Ill-smelling sores of a virulent nature have readily yielded to Yadil, gangrene has been arrested, hopeless cases of internal suppuration checked and cured, and its potency in dealing with tuberculosis, influenza and all epidemic diseases promises to open an entirely new chapter in the treatment of infectious disease.



Lord Lister.

To begin with, of course, efforts have been concentrated upon the medical uses of Yadil, but lately it has been drifting into the province of the stock-breeder and farmer, and demonstating an amazing effectiveness in the antiseptic treatment of the diseases peculiar to live-stock. So many valuable beasts have been saved, and so many epidemics checked that have been threatening pedigree herds, that it behoves all those concerned about live-stock of any description to make themselves familiar with the new possibilities

In the first place Yadil is so absolutely safe that it can be used as effectively on bees and poultry as on dogs, horses, and cattle, and even if it is used to tackle a trouble which by its nature cannot possibly yield, it can do no harm. In the second place its use is so simple as to require no complicated methods or special knowledge. An interesting booklet, "Yadil on the Farm" gives abundance of useful information on its application, and testimony from many large stock-breeders and kennel-owners who have had good reason to bless its power.

Perhaps its most notable achievements are those in connection with contagious abortion and Johnes' disease in cattle, and distemper in dogs. Both as a preventive and cure its effect on these diseases is little short of miraculous, and its results are both clean and lasting—which cannot always be said of other treatments. A certain amount of initial labour and expense are entailed, but labour and expense which no owner of a valuable herd of beasts or a pack of hounds worth perhaps £100 apiece is likely to take into account. In the treatment of bovine tuberculosis, too, Yadil is beginning to prove that cure is possible and that protection against contagion should be an easy matter. Based on the experience gained in treating tubercular humans with Yadil, and backed and encouraged by a few farseeing veterinarians and stock-breeders, extensive experiments are being made in this connection, and although a measure of experience has still to be gained in technique it is already obvious that the cure is there, just waiting the observations of experience to make it complete.

Alexandre Clement, the discoverer of the new Antiseptic.

Although much remains to be done in the way of determining absolute rules of treatment, Yadil Antiseptic (Veterinary) is a solid accomplished fact—the main thing that matters. There is no uncertainty about its powers and its safety, and it is no exaggeration to say that in it lies every live-stock-owner's insurance against disappointment, disease and financial loss.

* Translation: For those afflicted with Tuberculosis, garlic should be tried according to proper methods.

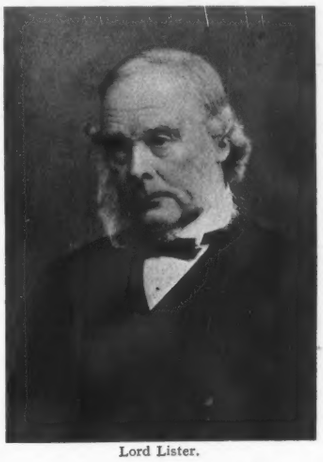
It is the ideal antiseptic that Lister and all his disciples sought for in vain, and it has already demonstrated its usefulness. It has made possible for the first time complete internal and external disinfection of the human system without any risk of poison or injury to cell tissues; and even the rank and file of the medical profession, conservative, slow always—as is probably wise—to recognise revolutionary discoveries, is gradually admitting its astonishing powers. Ill-smelling sores of a virulent nature have readily yielded to Yadil, gangrene has been arrested, hopeless cases of internal suppuration checked and cured, and its potency in dealing with tuberculosis, influenza and all epidemic diseases promises to open an entirely new chapter in the treatment of infectious disease.



Lord Lister.

To begin with, of course, efforts have been concentrated upon the medical uses of Yadil, but lately it has been drifting into the province of the stock-breeder and farmer, and demonstating an amazing effectiveness in the antiseptic treatment of the diseases peculiar to live-stock. So many valuable beasts have been saved, and so many epidemics checked that have been threatening pedigree herds, that it behoves all those concerned about live-stock of any description to make themselves familiar with the new possibilities

In the first place Yadil is so absolutely safe that it can be used as effectively on bees and poultry as on dogs, horses, and cattle, and even if it is used to tackle a trouble which by its nature cannot possibly yield, it can do no harm. In the second place its use is so simple as to require no complicated methods or special knowledge. An interesting booklet, "Yadil on the Farm" gives abundance of useful information on its application, and testimony from many large stock-breeders and kennel-owners who have had good reason to bless its power.

Perhaps its most notable achievements are those in connection with contagious abortion and Johnes' disease in cattle, and distemper in dogs. Both as a preventive and cure its effect on these diseases is little short of miraculous, and its results are both clean and lasting—which cannot always be said of other treatments. A certain amount of initial labour and expense are entailed, but labour and expense which no owner of a valuable herd of beasts or a pack of hounds worth perhaps £100 apiece is likely to take into account. In the treatment of bovine tuberculosis, too, Yadil is beginning to prove that cure is possible and that protection against contagion should be an easy matter. Based on the experience gained in treating tubercular humans with Yadil, and backed and encouraged by a few farseeing veterinarians and stock-breeders, extensive experiments are being made in this connection, and although a measure of experience has still to be gained in technique it is already obvious that the cure is there, just waiting the observations of experience to make it complete.

Although much remains to be done in the way of determining absolute rules of treatment, Yadil Antiseptic (Veterinary) is a solid accomplished fact—the main thing that matters. There is no uncertainty about its powers and its safety, and it is no exaggeration to say that in it lies every live-stock-owner's insurance against disappointment, disease and financial loss.

A LOGICAL ASPECT

In a leading article in the "Machine Tool Review" for Nov.-Dec. there appears the following important comments on methods of manufacture:

"Cost of manufacture is reduced by elimination of hand-work, which, in itself, offers no assurance of superior quality in the product. Good machine work will produce components which, in accuracy of form and size, are at least equal to those obtainable by the best hand-work. The wide-spread idea that hand-made watches, GUNS and other things are superior to the machine-made because they are made by hand, is a fallacy."

The B.S.A. Shot Gun is produced on highly efficient machinery from specially selected and tested materials, and combines all the essential features of a good gun, viz., beautiful lines, great strength, perfect balance, sweet crisp trigger pulls and fine pattern and penetration.

SHOOTING NOTES

By Max Baker.

A BREED OF HIGH PHEASANTS.

I WAS talking to a shooting man of very wide experience the other day who propounded his belief that the area comprised by Shropshire and South Herefordshire was the finest pheasant-shooting country in the kingdom. He not only based his view on the formation of the land, with its rapid succession of hills and valleys, all with timber suitably disposed to offer high birds, but also on certain characteristics possessed by the birds themselves. As to whether they had become a separate strain or whether habitat had influenced their behaviour he could not be precise, but of one thing he was certain, viz., that when pushed they took to wing with far more boldness than birds he had met elsewhere in the course of a long experience of sport all over the country. In these days of gliding experiments we can well understand how even the laziest bird would soon learn that it had only to launch itself in the air and spread its wings to pass from one hillside to another. The conditions might thus produce the habit, and the habit the extra wing facility; but whether the combination would produce transmissible qualities of constitution is a matter which our game farmers might be able to decide by drawing experimental batches of eggs from such a neighbourhood. Clearly the pheasant which lives in flat country would soon learn that only strenuous effort would enable it to pass from one spot to another over intervening trees, and it would, therefore, use its legs unless violently disturbed. The pheasant that is wanted is the one that takes to wing immediately the beaters enter its sanctuary, and I have often heard that this readiness is displayed in certain northerly places to so marked an extent that the rise is notably prolonged. The alternative of running forward to the furthest extremity and then squatting is more general in the east and south of our country.

WOOD-PIGEON LOAD FOR ·410.

"Fleur de Lys" writes:—"I have been experimenting for some little time with a full-choked .410 with a view to determining the most effective load for wood-pigeon shooting. This tiny bore, when fully choked, has such a small killing circle that the gun is only useful for deliberate shooting. For stalking rabbits on summer evenings or shooting sitting wood-pigeons from a hide it is a first rate weapon, but for ferreting or negotiating fast-flying birds something with a larger limit of error is desirable. With ordinary loads it will be found very difficult to kill pigeons clean when they are tail on to the shooter, if the range is over 20yds. In this position the bird often has the back of the head shielded by the body; the lungs and heart are also guarded, and besides all this, the target offered is very small. Just at present Belgian No. 6 chilled shot is very good and even, equal to the best British pre-war makes. The load which has hitherto given the best results is as follows: 12 grains Schultze, greaseproof card, seven-sixteenths inch white felt, two thin cards, ⅜oz. Belgian No. 6 chilled shot, 5 grains French chalk shaken down among the shot, and a thin card with firm turn-over. The French chalk seems to reduce deformation of the shot pellets; anyhow, it slightly increases the density and regularity of patterns. The above load having proved most satisfactory on the target, it was next tested on wood-pigeons. Three tail-on shots, with the ordinary standard load of 12 grains Schultze, same wadding, and ⅜oz. of No. 6 English chilled shot, have already been noted down: (1) Range about 25yds., pigeon fluttered away 200yds. before it could be recovered. (2) Range about 23yds., pigeon flew over 100yds. and fell dead. (3) Range about 27yds., pigeon hard hit, but got away. Only two chances were obtained with the special load and Belgian shot: the first, about 25yds., killed clean; the second, about 30yds., killed clean. As regards target results: the standard load gave 70 per cent. patterns, English No. 6 with chalk 81 per cent., and Belgian No. 6 with chalk 84 per cent. With English shot there were greater variations than with Belgian between the highest and lowest patterns; ⅜oz. Belgian No. 6 chilled contains 100 pellets on the average."

A PRE-WAR HIRED SHOOT.

Talking to a keeper about the good old days, I was surprised to hear that his preference in masters was not for the squire but for a City man, if possible a stockbroker, who did not care what he paid so long as he got the result. This man proved to have been employed on ground with which I was intimately familiar at one time, so that I could confirm from personal knowledge all his claims as to its abounding stock of game. Its area was 2,500 acres, and my informant had three keeper assistants besides a lad. He was responsible for all outgoings except rent, and these amounted to £1,200 per annum, with incomings allowed. Not only was game lavishly distributed among the farmers and other residents, but the shoot actually made the first-named a present of all the seed used for their crops. The labourers received a premium of 1s. 6d. per partridge nest hatched off and a shilling for pheasants. Everybody on the place was thus converted into a keeper. The expenses covered by the above fund included seed, as stated, rent of rearing ground, beaters, loaders, pony cart, lunches, beer, carriage of game and premiums for nests. Now for the result: there were 1,200 to 1,400 partridges, 70 to 80 hares, 400 to 500 rabbits and 3,000 to 4,000 pheasants. Total on the lower limit 4,670 head for £1,200, plus rent at, say, £300. I give the figures just as they were supplied by word of mouth, but have every reason to credit the veracity of my informant. Had the £1,500 been shared among six guns the fee would have been £250 each, and certainly not bad value at that. The underlying idea, for whatever it may be worth, is that to get shooting of the highest quality on land occupied by farmers you must make everybody your friend; and when this has been done the result in cost per head of game bagged is not high, for the simple reason that congenial land has great game productivity so long as its wild denizens are given every chance.

A SINGLE-HANDED SHOT GUN.

I have just been trying a very interesting weapon the classification of which is a trifle uncertain. It is a pistol in so far that it is worked by one hand only, but as the barrel is 28-bore, firing the usual shot cartridge of that designation, it is a species of shot gun. Its design and general characteristics are the work of "Charlie" Brown, alias "young Nimrod" of the 'eighties. Whether the weapon is merely a freak, of use only to a shooter of supreme skill, or whether it would be practical in the hands of specialists such as Captain Tracy in the modern system of revolver shooting, is a query I should much like to settle. This particular weapon is the favourite toy of its owner; with it he has shot one woodcock, one heron, several snipe, many pheasants, driven partridges, teal, mallard, curlew, redshank, wood-pigeons, rabbits and, last but not least, a wild goose. He prefers it to anything else for bolted rabbits, and considers that once you have learnt the trick of using it, no more sporting implement for casual walks can be imagined. Those who lost an arm in the war might well consider its possibilities. It was converted from an old rifle action, weighs 3lb. 11 oz., of which the barrel, at 13ins. long, accounts for 1lb. Its over-all length is 21ins., while the heavy gunmetal knob on the butt which locates the centre of balance at the striker is the final outcome of many tests. At 20yds. it throws a pattern nicely filling a 20in. circle. There is a slight tendency for the rather straight stock to slide back in the hand, so suggesting that a modification of the "Erskine" grip, as seen on the B.S.A. air-gun, might be an improvement. The 28-bore cartridge particularly interests me at the present moment, for I have placed before Nobel's a suggestion that they should specialise a cheap cartridge in this calibre to go one better than the .410, and that they should invite gun trade collaboration in the production of an ample supply of weapons. An unfilled need undoubtedly exists at the moment for a light gun and cartridge suited for casual strolling. Though the pistol is only for the specialist, the powers of this one prove the utility of light charges.

MARQUETRY AND OTHER CABINETS

INLAY and marquetry in woods and hard stones were favoured forms of ornamenting luxurious furniture on the Continent in the latter half of the seventeenth century, and the Italian compositions in veneer and marbles, agates, pebbles and lapis lazuli were especially admired by English travellers. In England and Holland marquetry in naturally coloured and artificially stained woods in intricate designs was evidently desired by important patrons, to judge by the fine examples still extant. One of the most important pieces of English marquetry of the reign of Charles II is the large cabinet or wardrobe which is said to have come from the Admiralty and is now in the possession of Messrs. M. Harris of New Oxford Street, in which (though the structural lines are simple) the marquetry design is rich and elaborate. The cupboard portion is surmounted by a scrolled pediment, enclosing a royal crown, crossed swords and an anchor. James Duke of York, was appointed to the great place of Lord High Admiral shortly after the restoration of his brother, Charles II, and his keen interest in naval matters was acknowledged by Pepys. He was diligent in his office, methodical, fond of authority and business. In 1674 he was, as a Roman Catholic, excluded from that office by the Test Act; but after his return from Scotland he regained, in May, 1684, the powers, if not the full dignity, of the Admiralty, Charles II (in order to protect his brother from the penalties of the Test Act) signing all the papers to which the Lord High Admiral's signature was required. The date of this cabinet lies, therefore, between May, 1684, and the death of Charles II in the following year.

The cabinet is supported on an arcaded stand containing three drawers and rests on ball feet. At each end and in the centre of the pediment are finials of flame of carved and stained pinewood, while the entire surface of the cabinet is marquetried with designs in walnut, sycamore, holly and other woods upon a ground of ebony. A noticeable feature is the representation in marquetry of spirally twisted columns flanking the cupboard doors, while on the two doors is a balanced design of large acanthus scrolls and floral sprays, in which pairs of trumpeting figures find a place. The cupboard doors, drawers and base are bordered with burnt laurelling. Such a remarkable piece must have been to the taste of James, who, as Duke of York and King, showed the Stuart taste for works of art; even during his exile at St. Germains, his royal apartments were richly adorned with tapestry and marquetry, vases of silver and mirrors in gilded frames.

The marquetry upon large surfaces, such as the falling fronts of cabinets and table-tops, usually took the form of a central oval, divided from the corner pieces by a broad banding of walnut veneer. On friezes and drawer-fronts marquetry was reserved in panels. When the marquetry fills the entire surface, as in the Duke of York's cabinet, the design is strengthened by thick scrolls, feathering into acanthus. It will be noticed that the cutting of the striped tulips, anemones and ranunculuses, which figure in this type of floral marquetry, is always carefully studied and accurate, as might be expected during that period of ardent floriculture.

In a richly marquetried cabinet in the possession of Messrs. Mallett of Bond Street, dating from about 1685 to 1690, the ovals of the cupboard doors are marquetried with a two-handled vase, heaped with lilies, tulips and carnations, amid which a bird is perched. This design, which is repeated inside the doors and on the sides of the cabinet, is divided from the corner pieces by a broad walnut surround. On the faces of the three drawers in the lower stage are reserves of floral marquetry of yellow and brown woods, interspersed with green-stained leaves and a few jasmine sprays relieved against an ebony ground. The drawers do not occupy the entire width of the lower stage, and when drawn out, small secret boxes are contrived in the sides. The interior fittings are beautifully finished, and on opening the cupboard doors the original brilliance of marquetry is at once apparent. The tiers of small drawers have marquetried reserves, and the centre cupboard door a miniature design of bird, flowers and two-handled vase. When this is opened, a marquetried arch appears leading to a minute pillared hall with parqueted floor. On the sides of this wonderfully-finished interior are looking-glass panels, placed so as to reflect the marquetried decoration on either side—in which, below the floral ornament, a mounted huntsman endlessly pursues a boar—and to give an effect of mystery and perspective. The minute finish and elaboration of this piece make it most interesting. Such temple-like interiors are more usually found in contemporary lacquered cabinets, and owe their original to Italian models in ebony and pietra dura.

MADE FOR THE DUKE OF YORK (AFTERWARDS JAMES II).
Height, 8ft. 6in; width, 6ft. 9in.; depth, 1ft. 11in.

In the early years of the eighteenth century the palette of coloured woods is abandoned by the marquetry cutters, and the design is worked out in two colours, a light and dark wood. Such a practice is obviously more economical, since one cutting suffices for at least two ornamental panels, one light, the other dark in ground. In a fall-front cabinet of this type, in the possession of Messrs. Mallett, the sides, front and drawer-fronts are decorated with scroll marquetry in reserves, in which the ground is holly, a light yellow, and the ornament walnut. The full front and drawers are edged with a burnt laurelling. When the front falls, the interior fittings are shown—a centre cupboard, with marquetried panel, small drawers and a tier of pigeon-holes, which allow place for secret drawers. These two-colour pieces indicate the gradual reliance upon English instead of exotic woods, for there are few native brightly coloured woods. English marquetry of this type had a brief flowering time, and in its revival in the reign of George III the effects were entirely distinct from those of the late Stuart and Orange reigns.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY WRITING CABINETS.

In the eighteenth century the place held previously by marquetry cabinets was taken by the secretaire. The differentiation and development of these writing tables and writing desks witness to a developed social life in which correspondence played—as we know it actually did in the case of Mrs. Delany, Horace Walpole and Mrs. Montagu—a considerable part in life. In the early eighteenth century the bureau or chest of drawers surmounted by a sloping flap which is let down to form a desk is the most common. For men of letters, such as Dean Swift, the two-tiered cabinet, in which to the lower portion containing its complement of drawers and sloping-lidded desk is superadded an upper structure opening with doors to show an interior divided into pigeon-holes, small drawers and compartments of various shapes and sizes, provided more accommodation.

From the walnut period a number of bureaux-bookcases have come down to us, and hence collectors have pursued examples of exceptional quality and features, such as miniature proportions and unusual materials. The double-domed top is rarer and more desirable than the straight cornice, and burr veneer than the straight-cut. A good and unusual example of these writing cabinets, in the possession of Messrs. Mallett of Bond Street, is veneered with burr yew, while the interior partitions are made of this wood in the solid. It has a double-hooded cornice, and the cupboard doors of the upper carcase are deeply panelled and fielded. A herring-bone banding of walnut surrounds these panels, which have an outer border of holly, while the flap is also banded with walnut. On opening the flap and cupboard doors the usual interior fittings are disclosed: there is a tier of pigeon-holes above an arched central recess and drawers on either side. As is usual in walnut pieces, there is a sliding cover to a well, a device which disappears later in the century when the "secret" of such contrivances had become universally known. In some pieces the fronts of pigeonholes can be drawn out, disclosing secret hiding-places at the back, but there are no special contrivances in this example.

A remarkable writing cabinet in the possession of Mr. C. H. F. Kinderman of Arlington Street has the very interesting feature of carrying its maker's signature in inlay—a practice that would have simplified many problems in the history of English furniture if it had been generally followed. As it is, we have only the rare evidence of bills, and that only in the case of furniture of the late eighteenth century.

"Samuel Bennett fecit" appears on the base of the fluted pilasters inside the glazed cupboard door. The cabinet is veneered with burr elm, and the frieze and base of the upper portion are marquetried in a fine intricate design, the whole composition being crowned by a scrolled pediment. The small drawers and cupboard in the interior are finely finished, and every detail speaks of the best English traditions of cabinet-making about 1700 except the swelling lines of the lower carcase, a practice to which the Dutch were much addicted. The projecting corners are marquetried, which gives them the air of being excrescences or mounts.

In the late eighteenth century the "common desks with drawers" are described as "nearly obselete in London," and in their place we have small writing tables and large "library tables," and a combination of glazed bookcase and writing cabinet of various forms and sizes. There is evidence of considerable thought and taste exhibited in the making of the illustrated cabinet from Strawberry Hill, that "villa residence of a gentleman of fortune in the 18th century ornamented with details borrowed from the 14th or 15th." But while Horace Walpole made an interesting attempt at renewing Gothic decoration, his taste in furniture was ecletic, and the little parlour, with its wallpaper and "plump" settees and chairs, as described by him in his letters, was entirely of this date. The sale of the contents of Strawberry Hill in 1842 created a sensation at the time, but, as Mr. H. B. Wheatley wrote, if the contents came under the hammer to-day they would probably sell for at least four times as much as the thirty-three thousand pounds then received. Only a few years after the sale Edward Fitzgerald found the rain coming through the roof of the Gothic castle and "gradually disengaging the confectionary battlements and cornices."

A WRITING CABINET FROM STRAWBERRY HILL.

It is veneered with satinwood and banded with tulip and rosewood. Height 7ft. 6ins.; width 6ft. 3ins.

In the secretary-bookcase the upper portion is glazed, the upper drawer of the lower carcase pulls down by means of a spring and quadrant to form a desk. This device is described in the "Guide" (1789), where the usual proportions of such writing cabinets are given as: Total height, 6ft.; length, 5ft. 6ins.; depth, 22ins. In this secretary, however, the proportions are larger, the width being 6ft. 3ins. and the height 7ft. 6ins. It is veneered with satinwood, banded with tulip and rosewood, and the date is evidenced by the flat veneered tracery of the glazed doors and the restrained pearl ornament surrounding the oval of figured satinwood with mitred surrounds in both the cupboard doors and the simulated doors of the desk portion. In the wings are tiers of drawers, which may have contained a part of Horace Walpole's correspondence, in which his long life was busied.

TAPESTRIES OF THE MONTHS

BOOKS AND ARMOUR.

THE rural occupations and pleasures of the passing seasons have been constant sources of inspiration for pictures, illuminations, tapestries and other forms of applied art. In Books of Hours, such as "Les très riches Heures de Jean de France, duc de Berry," the miniatures of the Months in the calendar are the most attractive of any. In Early Gothic times illuminations were much in vogue as suggestions for use by the designers of tapestries. From the beginning of the sixteenth century we find sets of tapestries under the title of "The Months," and one or two panels yet exist. Perhaps the earliest example of the months with names attached is the long narrow strip in the Victoria and Albert Museum, which shows the field labours of the last six months of the year. It was woven by a German tapestry-weaver in the first half of the fifteenth century, or, more likely, by a Flemish weaver resident in Germany. In later times the greater manufactories of tapestry had each their special designs for sets of the Months: thus we have the Mortlake, the Ferrara or Trivulce, and the Gobelin Months; of the last there were three or four varieties.

The finest designs were those of Brussels in the sixteenth century. One set has been attributed, without much reason, to the hand of Lucas Van Leyden, and is known as the "Lucas Months." Of these a very fine set, richly woven with gold in Brussels, became the property of the French Crown. Woven considerably later than the cartoons, it had borders of festoons of flowers and fruit, with eight cameos, the one in the middle of the top showing the sign of the month, the others containing busts and figures in grisaille. The pre-Gobelin Parisian weavers copied this set, and Colbert had a set woven at the Gobelins, using the original tapestries as cartoons, some time before his death in 1683. Thereafter eleven sets were made at the Gobelins with five types of borders, and of these are five panels belonging to Lord Somers at Eastnor. The original Brussels series figured among the tapestries burned, for the sake of the precious metals they contained, at Paris in 1797.

There are other series of Brussels origin which closely resemble the "Lucas Months," and there is often great confusion between them, especially as both were repeated long after the period of the cartoons, a common practice in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Tapestries belonging to one of these series were formerly in the Château du Plessis-Macé near Angers. Four tapestries of another series were once in Balloch Castle, Glasgow; a tapestry reproducing one of these belongs to Earl Beatty at Hanover Lodge, Regent's Park, while a series of four large hangings showing subjects of the Seasons or Months of March, August, October and December, the property of Lord Wimborne, have been entrusted to Messrs. Christie for auction on March 5th. Of these, the month of October for Autumn is illustrated here.

Of brilliant colour and great decorative power, these tapestries compare favourably with the Gobelin Lucas months. The original cartoons seem to date about 1530–50, while the figures bring to mind the designs of Bernard Van Orley and his school.

In the month of March, or Spring, a troop of gay people, very richly dressed, come, from a distant palace on the left, over a bridge through a gateway with ruined tower, to the end of the bridge marked by two slender columns. The cause of all the excitement is three men standing in the water using pole-nets, while two others draw a net to the right. Against the base of the nearest column rest a basket of fish and a club. On the right of the composition is the group of a lady paying a servant, while a youth standing behind enters the payment in a book. This group is generally associated with the month of August. There is a version of it, but not the same, in the August "Lucas" month of the Gobelins; but in the Balloch tapestry it is identical. In the background is a terraced, rounded hill with figures engaged in gardening and agriculture. In the sky to the left is a draped female figure holding a book and a branch—perhaps symbolic of Spring. The subject of the August or Summer tapestry is a cornfield with two reapers, both using a scythe and a sickle. The further bears a device on his back of two arrows saltire, points downwards, tied with ribbon. In the distance are buildings and trees, with figures engaged in harvest work, and far off on the right a wagon crossing a bridge. For the month of October or Autumn we have wine-making. Towards the left two men tread the wine-press, which is fed by men, women and children with basketfuls and bunches of grapes. To the right of it are two children asleep, leaning on a basket of grapes, while a man and woman bear a full tub to the press. On the right, hand barrels are being filled with juice—in front two children. In the background is a wattle fence and gateway. Close by it a piper seated in a tree makes music to the vintagers' dance, beyond it is a rounded hill with dovecotes, stream and a castle. In the sky appears a goat ridden by a man—perhaps an allusion to the god Pan or Bacchus. As in the "Lucas" months, for December we have skating. On a frozen lake or stream appear many beautiful figures gliding towards the left; on the bank in the foreground are groups putting on skates and children warming themselves at braziers. In the background are a castle and houses, in front of which a crowd of figures are disporting themselves. There is a tapestry of the same subject in Brownsea Castle, Dorsetshire, the seat of Mrs. Charles Van Raalte, which is illustrated in COUNTRY LIFE, April 9th, 1921; while the Earl Beatty tapestry appears in the same, May 1st, 1915.

These tapestries are framed by borders of flowers, fruit and foliage; in the top among the leaves appear a squirrel and birds, while the lower border contains dogs chasing hares half hidden by the foliage.

THE MONTH OF OCTOBER. FLEMISH TAPESTRY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

On Feb. 13th Messrs. Christie will sell English porcelain, including that of Bristol, Liverpool, Plymouth, Longton Hall, Chelsea, Derby-Chelsea, Worcester and Bow. There are here a notable pair of Chelsea figures of a Bacchante and faun with grapes and a flute, and a pair of Bow candelabra with figures of children symbolic of the Seasons, in front of arbours of flowers. On the following day they hold a silver sale, which includes a Charles I sweetmeat dish, a Commonwealth bowl and a pair of tea-caddies by Paul Lamerie. The 15th is devoted to French and other furniture, bronzes and works of art; while on Feb. 16th Messrs. Christie will sell modern pictures and water colour drawings, being the stock of J. A. Thompson of 6, Royal Opera Arcade, S.W.

A very interesting and important collection of Celtic coins with their Greek prototypes, which will appeal to the advanced or specialist collector, will be dispersed by Messrs. Sotheby on February 12th. It is the property of the late Horace Sandars, and occupied twenty years in collecting.

For three days, beginning on February 12th, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of books of general interest, with some important works and manuscripts relating to heraldry and genealogy. Part of it is a collection of duplicate and surplus books from the library of the Heralds' College. Another property includes some rare publications, such as the Essays of Sir Francis Bacon, printed by John Jaggard in 1613; Brome's Horace in English verse, first edition, 1666; while of general interest is the Bible of Captain Thomas Coram, philanthropist, who obtained the charter for the Foundlings' Hospital in 1739, in whose writing is an inscription bestowing the Bible on a relation. There are, too, a very rare Confession of Augsburg, translated by Richard Taverner, in first edition; Amadis de Gaul, translated by Johnson, first edition, 1664; and the rare second edition of Dr. Donne's Juvenilia in certaine Paradoxes and Problemes, 1633. Another property embraces important volumes on mountaineering, including the Alpine Journal, 1864–1922, and geography. There are a good many first editions of novels and a wonderful heraldic manuscript of the period of Henry VIII, drawn up about the year 1513, with hundreds of coats of arms in trick, an account of England in early times and interesting historical matter.

The armour and weapons belonging to the late Captain Herbert Graystone of the Moor, Hay, Herts, will come under the hammer at Messrs. Sotheby's on February 27th and 28th. It includes five cap-à-pie suits of armour; one, formerly in the Egmont collection, Cowdray Park, Sussex, is of bright armour of the sixteenth century. Of three-quarter suits there are seven, two being from Cowdray Park, one of which is English, circa 1620; another, with the Nuremberg mark, was once in the Caton Woodville collection; while yet another is English of Charles I's time. There are three demi-suits, one being of the Elizabethan period from Colworth Park, Bedfordshire. The pikemen's armour includes a suit of James I period, formerly the property of Lord Wolseley, and another from Wrotham Manor, Suffolk. Many helmets, one of which is a church mortuary specimen with pierced visor and broad gorget plates of English making of the seventeenth century, said to have come from Eye Berrington Church; a good collection of rapiers; some double-handed swords, one of Swiss workmanship from Ruthin Castle; another sword of mortuary type, said to have belonged to Oliver Cromwell, has his name engraved on the blade; stilettos, main gauches, halberds, maces, crossbows, wheel-lock guns, powder-horns, locks and other items complete the list.

On February 1st Messrs. Puttick and Simpson sold Baxter prints and Le Blond ovals, when a record price of £105 (Lewis) was obtained for a fine copy without varnish of Baxter's "Opening of Parliament"; while "Passion Flowers and Roses," on a white ground, fell to the same buyer at £28.

At Messrs. Robinson and Fisher's rooms, at their sale of pictures on February 1st, an important work by T. S. Cooper, painted in 1852, representing "In the Meadows, Canterbury," from Chilham Castle, Kent, reached the price of £252 (Mitchell).

FURTHER NOTES ON EASY STARTING

IN a recent article various suggestions were made for facilitating the starting of a refractory automobile engine, with the proviso that the engine and its accessories should be in normally sound condition. But starting may be difficult for two or even more reasons—because weather conditions are adverse; because the driver has not the "knack," or, in other words, does not make allowance for the individual peculiarities of his engine; or because the machine itself or some part of it needs adjustment. The previous article was intended only to cover the first condition: to simplify the starting of an engine with which the owner is well acquainted, and which functions well in normal atmospheric conditions. Now, however, it is proposed to give consideration, first to the question of "knack," and second to the various minor derangements that may make starting difficult, and their cure.

Peculiarities are individual to each engine, and not merely to each make or type of engine, and the driver who still experiences difficulty in spite of absolute assurance that his engine is mechanically perfect, and in spite of taking every reasonable precaution to ensure an easy start, is almost certainly failing because he has not learnt just the setting of throttle and ignition levers, combined with that of the air strangler, which best suits his engine. There is nothing for it but experimentation. The possible combinations of the three lever positions are many, but in time, without a doubt, he will find one combination to which the engine will answer almost invariably at the first pull up of the handle.

Before leaving this aspect of the subject it may be well to refer once again to the danger of back-fires, and to emphasise the necessity, if the engine be started by hand, for using an open grasp on the handle, and for standing well clear, so that if the handle does fly backwards out of the hand it does not give one a nasty rap on the wrist or knuckles as it completes a revolution. The matter is the more important with an engine that is difficult to start, in that one likely remedy for sluggishness is the advance of the firing point, and the consequently greater risk of a back-fire. Some engines are much more sensitive to a variation of the ignition point than others; some, indeed, will not give a single explosion unless the magneto be advanced to the full of its range of variability. In the latter case it may be said with some justice that probably the magneto itself is in need of expert attention; but, speaking of amateur motorists as one finds them, in most cases the magneto will not get that attention so long as it fires regularly when the engine is running and, by a full advance, will secure a reasonably easy start.

The question of throttle position is another upon which one can only generalise, since so much depends upon the engine itself, upon the type of carburettor fitted, upon the adjustment of the latter, and even upon the fuel used. As a rule, however, the carburettor setting for idle running allows the engine merely to tick over when warm, and is not sufficient to secure a start. In the case of most modern high-efficiency engines it is necessary to move the lever only the merest fraction of an inch to reach the best starting position. Too wide a throttle simply means that so much air is drawn in that the small suction across the carburettor jets cannot thoroughly impregnate it with petrol vapour. There is something of the "vicious circle" to be considered in the problem. Throttle position governs rate of revolution, obviously; but the engine will not run at all unless the rate of revolution is approximately right for the position at which the throttle is set. As the speed at which one can rotate the crank shaft by hand is very low indeed, it follows that only the smallest of throttle openings is required. This limits the supply of gas to the cylinders, but, on the other hand, it limits to a disproportionately great extent the admission of air; thus the starting mixture is small in quantity but abnormally strong—a similar condition to that which is caused if the expedients of "doping" the engine with petrol through the compression taps be adopted. The latter should not be necessary, except to free "gummy" pistons in the cylinders—and even then paraffin should be used rather than petrol; nor is it correct to flood the carburettor to such an extent that pools of surplus spirit slop about the shanks of the jets. The desired effect is probably gained, unless one overdoes the flooding or doping to such an extent that the engine is choked with liquid petrol, as may quite easily happen if the air ports are closed as well. The position is then merely complicated by the short-circuiting of the plug points that is quite likely to occur, in addition to the incombustibility of the over-rich mixture.

The flooding of the carburettor is a ticklish question. The makers insist that it is unnecessary; and yet ninety-nine drivers out of a hundred resort to it almost unconsciously. The point is, however—ignoring the makers' opinions for a moment—that whether the petrol feed be by gravity or vacuum, "tickling"

THE STANDARD OF PERFECTION

PERFECT engineering skill and long experience, coupled with the finest equipment in Europe's greatest and most modern Motor Factory, has resulted in the production of the 10/15 h.p. Fiat engine.

SUPREME simplicity and mechanical correctness are its keynotes in design: perfect reliability and an amazing power output is the result in practice.

THIS Fiat engine, like all other emanations from the Fiat Factory, is designed to meet all conditions—the conditions have not to be adapted to meet the capabilities of the car.

the carburettor ensures either a float-chamber full of spirit for starting purposes, or tells one, by its failure to cause petrol to flow over the sides of the float chamber, that for some reason the fuel feed system is out of action. This may simply be caused by an empty tank; the reason may be a choked petrol pipe, a faulty vacuum tank or—the petrol tap may not have been turned on! So one does not feel inclined to advise, nor to practise, in accordance with the carburettor-makers' opinions in the matter of flooding.

LINES OF INVESTIGATION.

If an engine fails to start when everything, so far as one can tell, is as it should be, and when the usual means to secure a start have been tried unavailingly, there are two main lines of investigation, although each divides up into a number of sub-enquiries, so to speak, as one goes along. First, is the petrol getting to the carburettor and the mixture to the engine; second, is there a spark at the plugs? If the answer is in the affirmative in both cases the engine should start. But a spark at the plugs when the latter are lying on top of the cylinders does not necessarily guarantee a spark, or so good a spark, under compression in the cylinders.

The gap may be too wide, or the insulation a little faulty. In the open atmosphere the path of least resistance may be across the points in the shape of a spark, but under compression it may lie through the fault in the insulation. If the mica or porcelain is sound, it is possible that the too-wide gap prevents a spark from occurring at all when the additional obstacle of compression opposes the passage of the high tension current. As a matter of precaution most motorists will put in a set of new plugs, which is usually handy in the tool locker; but at the same time it is well to remember that the spark gap is not really a haphazard matter of something between a sixty-fourth and a thirty-second of an inch. It should be an exact measurement—0.4mm. is the usually stated figure, although slight variation with different magnetos and different engines may be advisable. Too small a gap, also, is quite as much an error as too great a space between the points and has the incidental disadvantage of rendering the plugs more readily liable to become "shorted," and so cause missfiring, if not actual failure to operate. Speaking of "0.4mm." suggests that every motorist must carry a micrometer with him to ensure a correct spark gap. It is not quite so bad as all that, for the simple reason that sparking plugs, like every other part of a car, are intended for inexpert use, and in practice a slight variation on either side of the absolutely correct measurement is not of vital importance. Also, little gauges may be obtained providing in small compass "feelers" for spark gap and exhaust and inlet valve clearance.

Before leaving the ignition system as a possible source of difficult starting, it may be well to state that on this account, as well as for a variety of other reasons, it is inadvisable to keep a car in a motor house that is either cold or damp—or both. Apart from the fact that this may cause condensation of moisture in the induction passages, or even on the plug points, and so upset the running of the engine, the fibre bush of the contact-breaker rocker-arm is liable to swell slightly and prevent the points from making and breaking in order to cause a flow of high tension current in the secondary circuit of the magneto winding. This, of course, is a point to be observed in a case of failure to start, although it calls for the services of a second person at the starting handle while one watches the operation of the contact breaker. The points of the latter should be squared up with a very fine flat file or a piece of fine emery cloth, care being taken that contact is made over the whole face of the platinum points. Very careful filing is necessary to prevent the removal of more platinum at one side than another, and the lightest of touches should be given with the file so that if a slight error in filing is made it can be rectified with a minimum of waste. It may be added that readjustment of the points in regard to their gap will be necessary, as the squaring-up process will have increased the space, and may even prevent them from making contact at their original setting. Cleaning of the high-tension distributor of the magneto is also advisable, as a leakage of current may take place across the fine metal fragments caused by long use.

And finally—it should have been primarily—before dismantling any portion of the magneto, make quite certain that the parts, and particularly the plug wires at their connection to the magneto, can be restored to their correct relative positions.

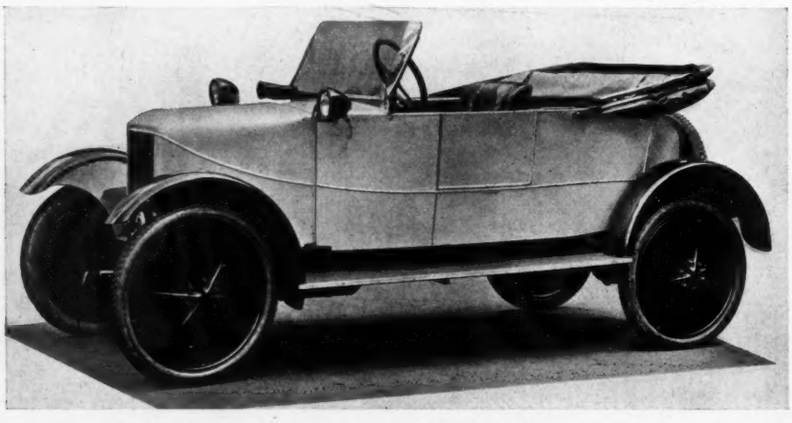
THE DANGER OF AIR LEAKS.

The other branch of investigation is rather more straightforward. We will presume that there is petrol in the tank; that the tiny air orifice in the filler cap of either a gravity tank or the main reservoir of a vacuum system is unobstructed, that the petrol pipes are clear, the filter fairly clean and the tap turned on. All this we learn on opening the bonnet and endeavouring to flood the carburettor. If the float chamber fills, all is well so far. Failure to start, however, may still be caused by a variety of small faults which we cannot find unless we know where to look. We shall assure ourselves, first of all, of course, that the jet, or jets, is, or are, unobstructed; that the valves and their springs are all sound. But unwanted air may be entering and weakening the mixture below the minimum explosive strength through an imperfect joint between carburettor and inlet pipe or cylinder casting, or between the inlet pipe, sometimes termed induction manifold, and the cylinder block; one or more valuable caps, if any are provided, may have a leaky joint; an extra-air valve may be imperfectly fitted or badly adjusted; the valve guides may have become worn and allow air to leak into the cylinders past the stems of the valves; or, if the detachable head has been down for decarbonising it may have been replaced in a fashion that allows general air leakage, leakage between the cylinders, or water leakage.

All these joints must be absolutely perfect, or difficult starting and uneven running will be the least serious of the possible results, while failure to start or run at all may be caused by one single bad joint.

ADJUSTING THE VALVE TAPPETS.

The last likely place to look for trouble is the valve tappets. Here again the clearance between the tappets and the valve stem is a matter of mathematical certainty which, in practice, is capable of slight error without serious ill-effect. So far as the inlet valve is concerned, the clearance when the engine is hot—and accurate adjustment cannot be effected unless the metal of the engine is at its average working temperature—should be the smallest gap that can be called a clearance at all—to all intents and purposes there should be room for a film of oil and nothing else. The exhaust valve clearance requires to be a trifle greater. As a rough and ready means of testing this important point, the engine should be turned over until both valves of the cylinder under attention are closed and the cams quite clear of the tappets. If, then, one endeavours to slide each valve up and down in its guide with the fingers, it should be just possible to feel movement of the exhaust valve, while the inlet should be almost rigid. Admittedly, this is a very rough and ready method, but, as sometimes, the lock-nut of a valve tappet will loosen with vibration, and a fresh adjustment have to be made on the road, it is useful to have some idea of the relative clearance of the two valves. The desirability of carrying a combination gauge has already been referred to.



A USEFUL ESTATE OR STATION CAR.

The Stoneleigh car which will carry, besides the driver, two passengers or luggage up to four hundredweight, is a very useful proposition for work for which a big car is not required. Its price is £185 and its running costs are said to be less than three half-pence per mile.

The Lighting of Road Vehicles

OUR recent note on an ill considered and anomalous lighting Bill has prompted a correspondent to send a copy of a booklet issued by the Cyclists' Touring Club "explaining" why cyclists object to compulsory red rear lights. In his covering letter our correspondent makes some very interesting remarks, the main tenor of which is perhaps that the speed of a vehicle at night time should be limited by the power of its head lamps. This, of course, is a very sound point, but our correspondent and others who have made the same comment apparently overlook the equally important fact that there is an agitation afoot to limit the power of motor car head lights and to prevent the use of lamps of greater power than those approved by armchair critics or legislators.

The whole subject is a very complicated one, and it is impossible to summarise it in a few words and say "Here we have all the essentials of the case." One can only review it in outline from different points of view. Our correspondent, Mr. W. P. Cook, maintains that our present lighting laws are satisfactory. This is a thesis with which we cannot possibly agree. Without going into the question of what constitutes the principle of our lighting laws, we suggest that for any law to be satisfactory it must be intelligible

THE road performance given by the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall places it among the great cars of the world. Yet its chassis price is but £695, and its annual tax only £23. The engine is a new design in which use is made of the Lanchester harmonic balancer and other devices that ensure the highest quality of functioning. Users of high-powered cars should not fail to inform themselves of the advantages which they can obtain in the 23-60 h.p. Vauxhall.

IN the 14 h.p. Vauxhall a sweet-running car of wonderful flexibility is offered to the owner-driver at the low price of £595 for the complete four-seater car, with a particularly roomy body of Vauxhall grade. The running cost is low. A petrol consumption of 30 m.p.g. is frequently obtained. ¶ A wide range of bodies is available for both types of chassis. and either universally known or easily ascertainable. Now, does anyone know exactly what the lighting requirements for vehicles on our roads are at the present time? We have no compunction in admitting that we do not, and various applications that we have made to the police authorities and to the legal departments of motoring organisations have revealed that similar uncertainty exists in the minds of these authorities. To quote one example only: how many lights is a motor car required by law to show in a forward direction? Under the Defence of the Realm regulations any vehicle on the road at night time except a hand-propelled vehicle or cycle had to carry lights showing its over-all width. As far as we can ascertain, the only general legal requirement now is that a vehicle should show one light on its extreme off side, but police prosecutions of motorists who have only one light showing are not unknown, and one also sees large numbers of cars on the road with only their head lamps alight, neither of which indicates the extreme off side of the vehicle. Horse-drawn vehicles seem to carry just what lights their drivers fancy, mounted in any place, reasonable or unreasonable, convenient for the attachment of a lamp bracket. Some cyclists use red rear lights, others do not.

CHANGING CONDITIONS AND ANCIENT LAWS.

At present, the main points on which legislative guidance is required are the reduction of the dazzle danger and the rear illumination of vehicles. The first consideration that one must bear in mind is surely that the conditions of our roads have changed enormously since the war, and legislation based on principles perfectly sound and applicable in 1914 will not necessarily meet the case of 1923. The main difference is, of course, the enormous increase in mechanically propelled traffic, which, it may be stated without fear of contradiction, constitutes the majority of our road traffic at night time.

THE MOTORIST'S CASE.

The motorist's point of view, as we understand it, is this: he says, allow me to use whatever head lights I want without any restriction as to power, and I do not mind in the slightest whether other vehicles on the road carry red rear lights or not; but if you restrict the power of my head lights, you must in common fairness impose a corresponding requirement on other road users which shall take the form of some illumination which will make their presence on the road apparent to one approaching them from behind.

WHAT IS AN OBSTRUCTION?

All experienced night users of the roads are surely agreed that every obstruction on the road ought to be illuminated, which immediately brings up the question of what constitutes an obstruction. The Cyclists' Touring Club, with its membership drawn from a very small fraction of the total number of cyclists in the country, has issued a booklet, to which we have already referred. One of the few sound points to be found in this booklet is that the red rear light should be limited in its application to obstructions on the road, a principle with which we have already agreed. Our disagreement with the Cyclists' Touring Club arises through their assertion that the cyclist does not constitute an obstruction. If the cyclist always maintained his proper position at the extreme left-hand side of the road, we might be inclined to concede this point, but everyone has experienced the obstruction of three, four or even five cyclists riding abreast or of one alone hugging the crown of the road.

This C.T.C. booklet goes on to urge that if the cyclist needs a red rear light, the pedestrian needs one far more so, but this is an entirely fallacious argument for the simple reason that the pedestrian, unlike the cyclist, is not limited to the roadway for his means of travel. A drunken man who walks in the middle of the road and sometimes lies down there and goes to sleep is, of course, a danger that cannot be countered by any legislative provision of a red rear light.

In a somewhat fantastic effort to meet the whole question by a reductio ad absurdum argument, perambulators, hand carts, etc., are suggested. Now during the war perambulators had to carry their lamps just as every other vehicle, but we do not consider they are sufficiently numerous to deserve any serious consideration in this present discussion. In a somewhat extensive experience of night travelling all over Great Britain we have never yet seen an unattended perambulator on the road at night time, and it is significant that whether required by law or not, most users of hand carts carry a light, whether for their safety or to show them on their way does not at the present concern us. Incidentally, many cyclists also carry red rear lamps, which makes the exceptions all the more dangerous. One might ask Mr. Cook and the C.T.C. why, if their arguments are sound, do any cyclists incur the great encumbrance of the tail lamp when there is no legal compulsion on them to do so?

UNIVERSAL REAR LIGHTS.

We would like to refer in more detail to many of the points of Mr. Cook's letter and of the C.T.C. booklet, but refrain from doing so if only because we want to get away from the idea that it is only cyclists that ought to be made to carry a red rear light. The only vehicle that does not require a rear light out of consideration for the safety of other road users is the vehicle which is least often overtaken, namely, the mechanically propelled vehicle, which is the only vehicle required by law to carry a red rear light. We are, of course, not suggesting that red rear lights on motor is set upon the SINGER—a car that has held a world-wide reputation since 1912, when it was first introduced, at which time it was the first light car produced embodying large car practice. Since then many thousands of SINGER Cars have been manufactured, and have proved their qualifications in every civilised country. On road and track the SINGER holds a unique reputation in the history of motoring.

SINGER

"The Seal of Satisfaction"

What of 1923?

Since the inception of the SINGER "Ten" many improvements have been effected year by year. This year the new engine develops very considerably more horse power than its predecessor, allowing a four-seater body to be fitted—providing ample power for family motoring under all conditions. The car is fully equipped with Self-Starter, All-Weather side screens (which are rigid and independent of the hood, the rear side screens being adjustable and forming a V-shaped rear screen when desired), and is sold at a price (taking into account the extra equipment) equivalent to the pre-war price. Better value or more attractive features cannot be found anywhere.

A New 15 h.p. Six Cylinder SINGER, introduced for the first time at the 1921 Olympia Show, is now available for those motorists who desire a car of greater power, more capacity and added refinements. During 1922 this car was submitted to every possible test for strength, power and reliability, and it has emerged triumphant as a car capable of carrying five passengers over every part of the country, with a maximum of comfort, and without any anxiety regarding involuntary stoppages.

The Coventry Premier 10 h.p. Car now manufactured by the Singer Company is the same engine, chassis and body as the famous Singer "Ten," but without Electric Starter, Side Curtains, and certain refinements which account for the difference in the price.

cars should be abolished. In our opinion every vehicle that is compelled by law to use the roadway and is excluded from use of the footpath ought to be compelled to carry a warning light to the rear. Really from the point of view of other road users this is more necessary than a white light pointing to the front in the case of cycles and ordinary hand carts at least.

From the point of view of the night traveller there is no difference between an unlighted farm cart, hand cart or cyclist and a barricade or a level crossing gate provided that the vehicle is somewhere in the neighbourhood of the centre of the road. As a cyclist presumably, Mr. Cook admits that barricades and railway crossings need illumination because they are obstructions, and it is not without interest that the authorities of Birmingham have issued an order to the effect that cyclists who do not keep close in to their proper side of the road constitute an obstruction irrespective of the time of day.

There are two more points in the C.T.C. booklet that we cannot overlook. The first is that red lights ahead are distinctly confusing to a driver because he cannot tell whether they are near or far. Surely judgment of distance is one of the elementals of driving a vehicle and the man who cannot tell the approximate distance of an obstruction ahead ought not to be on the road at all. Secondly, it is urged that it is extremely difficult to keep a rear lamp alight on a bicycle, and innumerable accidents have resulted and are continually resulting by cyclists looking round to see whether their rear lamps are alight. This we consider the crowning stroke, for we never before realised that it was more difficult for a cyclist to turn round to see his rear light than it is for a motor car driver, or at least for a motor cyclist, to do the same.

The arguments of our correspondent and of the Cyclists' Touring Club leave us quite unconverted from our previous opinion and perhaps even more strongly confirmed in it, namely, that all vehicles on the road at night time should carry a red rear light and that motorists' head lights should not be restricted in power, but some sort of dipping device might advisedly be made compulsory by law. Periodically we are invited to test some new anti-dazzling device for fitting to head lights, but whether by coincidence or otherwise, it has turned out that the only occasions we have been maligned for using dazzling head lamps have been when we have been using one of these alleged anti-dazzle lamps!

May we ask another question by way of conclusion? Has Mr. Cook or anyone concerned in the compilation of this fantastic booklet ever driven a motor car on a wet night? Have they driven a car on a fine night in a suburban street with occasional street lamps and with their own head lamps dimmed or extinguished out of deference to public opinion and the convenience of others on the road? If so, would they care to repeat the experience, or are they merely callous to the feelings of others?

The Carriage of Tools.

SOME months ago we published in this journal an article describing some ingenious methods that are to be observed on various cars for the accommodation of tools, so that these shall be readily accessible to the driver when required, but quite out of the way when not in use. Reference was made to the excellent provision made on the Humber car, on which all the tools necessary for the removal of a wheel—jack, handle and brace—and also an oil can are carried in brackets on the engine side of the dashboard, where they are quite out of the way, but immediately accessible.

Similar consideration for the owner-driver is manifested by a recent addition to the equipment of the Armstrong Siddeley six-cylinder car. The oil can is carried on a special sheet metal bracket attached to the front face of the dashboard, where, when the near side of the bonnet is lifted, it is immediately to hand. The can is held securely by two upward curved tongues at one end of the bracket and by a spring of flat steel at the other end, the spring being so shaped as to pass up behind and partly over the handle and the risk of displacement of the can or vibration, causing rattle, is totally eliminated.

The Daimler Company also has studied the question of tool accessibility to some effect, and our illustration shows the excellent rear tool box.

FEATHER-WEIGHT WOOLLEN MATERIALS

THE NEW NUANCE FOR STOCKINGS. FRONT DRAPERIES.

QUITE the most attractive and important departure in the fabric world are the new light-weight woollens. These are assured of a succès fou, for their like has never been produced before, either in the matter of quality or colouring. They are, as goes without saying, expensive, since only the finest of yarns are used and the most costly of dyes, while the weaving is immaculate. The colours, again, although bright, are not in the least voyant, the simplest being effected in parti-coloured stripes and the most extravagant resembling native handwork embroidery, inspirations culled from the East. The latter, employed as trimmings, will in all probability prove a formidable rival to ordinary embroideries, especially when the design is a raised one, as is frequently the case; while the fact that most of the grounds are cream or oatmeal does not necessarily mean that they are in the least ephemeral, as they are so closely covered with the woven coloured patterns. An example I handled the other day was so soft I could draw a double width through the palm of one hand. This was in narrow parti-coloured stripes, almost imperceptible pink, blue, green and mauve, and was destined for the fashioning of simple little frocks to be worn with collar and cuffs of cream embroidered lawn or white organdie and lace. These should make ideal and striking early spring gowns, completed for the first months by the inevitable animal stole and a small swathed toque of fine flexible straw picking up, more or less, the colourings in the woollen fabric.

At the same house there was also shown me a three-piece suit of delicate putty woollen ornamented with deep bands of a trimming in tone worked with small wool blobs. The latter were not used in straight lines, but in motifs to suggest large pockets on the hip-length coat, pointed pieces on the wide sleeves and building the deep upstanding collar. The result was most arrestingly novel and pleasing.

A very cursory survey of the shops suffices to bring the conviction that a campaign is out against sombre tones used en masse. There is, in particular, an apricot nuance which might almost be described as a pinkish cinnamon. This, in slight gradations of tone, is being shown in a variety of materials and is also the now correct shade for day silk stockings.

From the Riviera comes news of a revived interest in pleated skirts, small flat pleats used alternatively with plain panels and accompanied either by a short coat held to the figure by a threaded sash or a long pouching bodice. Illustrated is a model arranged after the latter manner, carried out in grey or putty-coloured face cloth, the long revers of the bodice faced back with white lawn or organdie. The draped sash is of the same material and has a single pleated end, though this is essentially the type of frock that is being worn with some effective Eastern patterned silk sash.

Another affirmed furore is for silk and silk and wool fabrics with a crapy surface, which seems to throw up high lights even in the most sombre of nuances. They are all extraordinarily soft and drape to perfection, and consequently allow of that increased circumference at the hem that is now so noticeable in the new models without at the same time detracting from the straight, slim line.

The raising of the hem at the back and the dropping of it in front, the latest version of the uneven hem line, may be directly traced to the recently inaugurated front draperies. Every day this movement grows in diversity. Worn with a wonderful corsage of purple and gold embroideries worked on copper net, there came a skirt of black satin that fell in long dipping folds in front, caught at the top by two handsome cabochons toned to the bodice in mock jewels; while a day gown of a dull petunia mauve silk crêpe similarly arranged had a great square plaque of embroidery at the waist, above which fell a loose, free, straight bodice to which a quaint little bolero movement was imparted by a line of the same embroidery, the latter of dull gold picked out with old blue, faint pink and green.

£22,500 was paid in banknotes by me at my offices at Calder House, Piccadilly, for a pearl necklace. It would have realised more at auction. If you are contemplating selling the contents of your house by auction, don't at the eleventh hour entertain a cash offer, but let the sale proceed. Why? you ask. Simply because you will probably get a half or even double as much. If you are in urgent need of money and have entrusted to me the valuation and the arrangement of the sale, I am willing to advance, if you need it, £2,000 to £5,000 before the sale can take place. In your own interests the auction sale is the thing.

High Court Judges—past and present—always advise Hurcomb. Tapestries, pictures, engravings, fiddles, postage stamps, porcelain, objects of art, all sell equally well. Two trusted experts motor all over the kingdom, and for a fee of 21/- will point out your treasures and tell you the price you will get if you wished to realise.

SOME BOOKS OF THE DAY

THOSE of us who hold that Katherine Mansfield's too early death has left Miss Ethel Colburne Mayne almost our only distinguished woman short story writer will welcome her new book, Nine of Hearts (Constable, 6s.). Her talent shows as exquisite as ever. Something akin to Miss Mansfield's concentration on the sensations of her characters rather than the movement of her story seems to be more in evidence in this book than is usual with her; but in several of these stories—for instance in the first, "Gytha Wellwood," and the last, "Light"—she, as it were, presses sensation until she is able to extract movement from it. It is Gytha Wellwood's attitude to the tragedy of her life, not the tragedy itself, which concerns Miss Mayne, and that attitude changes with the course of the tale. It is the growth of Athene Luttrel's feeling towards her mother which is our concern in "Light," rather than any material happening. This is a very high achievement. Ponjola (Constable, 7s. 6d.), Miss Cynthia Stockley's new novel, is a book of the very moment, being published on the 8th. Mr. C. E. Montague, whose "Disenchantment" was much discussed last year, gives us now Fiery Particles (Chatto and Windus, 7s.). Mr. Gilbert Frankau's book, Men, Maids and Mustard Pot (Hutchinson, 7s. 6d.), has a dedication in which he assures us that its contents were written "solely and sheerly for love of that most difficult craft whose whole concept, as I see it, is contained in the two words 'short' and 'story.'" John Penrose (Murray, 7s. 6d.) is a novel with a Cornish setting by Mr. J. C. Tregarthen, whose previous work on the natural history of Land's End leads one to expect the best of local colour here. From Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, published at 7s. 6d., come Sea Salted, an Elizabethan story in which Drake plays a considerable part, by J. Allan Dunn; The Girl at Big Loon Post, by George Van Schaick, a Hudson Bay story and a good example of the sort that its title suggests; Fern Seed, a mystery tale turning on a resemblance, by Henry M. Rideout; and Mad'mezel Suzanne, a story of Paris and theatres and what is called love, by Miss Meg Villars. A new novel by Mr. W. E. Norris, Next of Kin, comes from Messrs. Hutchinson, price again 7s. 6d.; and from the same publishers, Ponga Bay, by Miss Sophie Osmond, a story of New Zealand in the days before the Maori War and to be welcomed on that account as proving to be, in setting at least, a little out of the ordinary rut.

Madame Claire, by Susan Ertz, and Up the Hill of Fleet, by George Renwick, are the latest additions to Mr. Fisher Unwin's First Novel Library, which has produced so many good volumes that I always open a new one with the highest hopes. The Man in the Box (Mills and Boon, 7s. 6d.), by Nigel Worth, has a picture on its paper wrapper of a lady in Oriental costume, standing, knife in hand, over the form of a bound and prostrate young man in a white drill suit. Things look serious, for someone has even thoughtfully rolled up the carpet as though to avoid a mess; but for all that my impression is that after thrilling adventures the young gentleman will survive to end happily on the last page.

Laughter from a Cloud (Constable, £1 1s.), the eagerly expected collection of poems, essays and plays from the late Sir Walter Raleigh's papers, has reached me, but too late for due notice in the present issue of COUNTRY LIFE.

Mr. Edward Shanks' First Essays on Literature (Collins, 12s. 6d.) is noticed at length on another page.

Twelve volumes of the Bankside Acting Edition of Shakespeare (Wells, Gardner and Darton, 1s. each) have been sent to me. Handy in size, well got up and printed, and most useful for their purpose, they should be known and used by all schools and amateur companies. The three dainty little volumes, the first of the Greenleaf Theatre Series, containing Belle and Bear, The Gilded Wreath and The Curious Herbal, are all by Miss Constance Smedley. Apparently a first edition, intended for a certain small public, was long ago exhausted, and these are volumes of a second and much larger edition designed to meet a growing demand. I can imagine that these "rhythmic" plays given as their author directs would produce delightfully.

Sidelights on Birds (Heath Cranton, 12s. 6d.), by H. Knight Horsfield, cannot fail to interest the very many people who love birds and would like to understand them. Sport and Adventure in Africa (Seeley Service, 21s.) is an account by Captain W. I. Shorthouse, D.S.O., of twelve active years in tropical Africa. The New Zealanders in Sinai and Palestine (Whitcombe and Tombs, Christchurch, N.Z.) is the third volume of the excellent literary memorial to the war service of the New Zealanders, published under the authority of the New Zealand Government. This volume is by Lieutenant-Colonel C. Guy Powles, C.M.G., D.S.O.

Tombs of the Kings (Rickinson, 1s.), an illustrated handbook to the objects in the British Museum relating to Akhenaten and Tutankhamen, is of considerable topical interest. Musical Competition Festivals (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.) is by Mr. Ernest Fowles; a copy of the second edition of Mr. Arnold J. Toynbee's The Western Question in Turkey and Greece (Constable, 18s.) has reached us; also Farm Surveying (Educational Company of Ireland, 5s.), by Joseph Hanly; and a most handy, well printed guide book, Rome and its Environs (Ward, Lock, 5s.), with three large street plans.

A very good issue of the Cornhill appears for February, and the same remark applies to the London Mercury, which, besides Mr. Hardy's fine poem "On the Portrait of a Woman About to be Hanged," has a very good story by Mr. Archibald Marshall, poems by Lord Dunsany and Mr. Edmund Blunden, and several other noteworthy articles. The Windsor has an article by that most observant of golfers, Mr. H. H. Hilton, dealing with that essential of golf, good balance, and giving some useful hints for its attainment. Transactions of the Royal Scottish Arboricultural Society (Douglas and Foulis, 3s.) has reached us for December, 1922.

A book due to appear within the next few weeks which many of us will eagerly await is De Senectute: More Last Words, by the late Frederic Harrison, coming from Mr. Fisher Unwin, who later on is to publish Mme. Duclaux's Images and Meditations: Poems.
